Living The Good Life In Florida In August And September

By Dan Rattiner

Back in early August, the people of Florida braced for the arrival of Hurricane Charley, which was roaring up the Caribbean toward Florida. I called my mother, who lives in Pompano Beach, halfway between Fort Lauderdale and Palm Beach.

"Are you doing anything about the hurricane?" I asked.

"No," she said. "I just hope it doesn't interfere with my golf game"

My mother is 91 years old. She and my late dad lived on the East End for half a century, running the drugstore in Montauk.

"I think you ought to get out of there," I said. "Do you have gas in your car?"

"It's not going to hit here," she said.

The Mayors of Miami ordered everyone to stock up on water and flashlights and be prepared for the worst. Hurricane Charley, however, after charging over the Cayman Islands, veered across the Florida Keys and roared up the west coast of Florida, laying waste to Sanibel, Fort Meyers and Naples before fizzling out over Disney World. Damage was estimated at about $150 million.

Then Hurricane Frances appeared on the horizon. It clobbered Grand Bahama and proceeded to race to the west, directly, it seemed to

"I think in that hurricane, about a thousand houses got blown away on the East End," she said. "But it didn't hit me or your father."

Anyway, the exterminator is coming."

"The Governor of Florida has ordered the evacuation of the entire east coast of Florida," I told her.

"That's only if you're oceanfront," she said. "Cheko in Palm Beach called and is leaving.

She's renting a room in a motel inland. She gave me the name and phone number there so I should check on her to see if anything happens to her."

"They think it might hit south of there," I said.

"It isn't going to hit here," she repeated.

As it approached however, Hurricane Frances, which now looked like it was going to hit Fort Lauderdale, changed course, and veered off northward, indeed for a time aiming directly at my mother, but then changing course even more and heading for a town just north of Palm Beach, which is where it eventually hit. First, however, it arrived ten miles off the east coast of Florida (and my mother) and just hovered there for four days, me, toward Pompano Beach. This was in late August.

Again I called her.

"This one is coming right at you," I said.

"The hurricane is not going to hit the house," she told me. "Also I have flying ants. It's from all the rain from Hurricane Frances, I think.

winds spinning clockwise at 130 miles an hour. Many parts of Florida then lost power.

I called my mother again.

"Do you have power?" I asked.

"The flying ants are terrible. The exterminator came, did nothing. People shouldn't have to live with flying ants like this."

"What about power?"

"The power is out. But the phone works, as you can see. I've called another exterminator."

"How long have you been without power?"
"Went out yesterday. But I'm fine."

The next day, the power came back on at my mother's. But then Hurricane Ivan came charging up the Caribbean. It devastated Haiti, took a swipe at Cuba and headed for Florida. Again I called my mother.

"Still another hurricane is coming. You really should get out of there," I said.

"Ivan?" she said. "It's not going to hit here. I'll be fine."

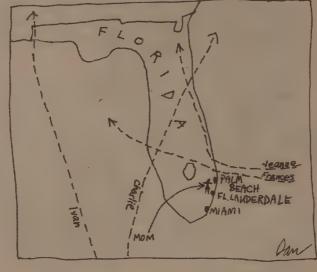

"Mom."

"I'm flying up for Rosh Hashanah. We'll see each other."

"What if it hits when you're supposed to come up? They might ground the airplane."

"It won't be anywhere near the airplane," she

President Bush traveled to Florida so he could be seen bringing bags of ice and containers of water to those still recovering from Frances. His brother, the governor, told people, once again, to stock up with candles and flashlights, portable radios and batteries — replace anything that was used up during the first two hurricanes. Also be prepared for another evacuation.

My mother flew to New York City where she stayed with my sister. I took the Jitney to New York to meet up with her and have Rosh Hashanah dinner there. Then at six in the morning of Rosh Hashanah, she woke everybody up and, groggy, had my sister and her husband drive her out to the Jewish Center in East Hampton for morning services. I went with them. Our family was one of the founding families.

Everyone wanted to see mom. She has lots of friends here. And after the services, we drove her around town. She really wanted to go out to Montauk but my sister and her husband said there wouldn't be time. Mom needed to get back to the City to see some of her other friends. Besides, we all were exhausted (except mom) and wanted to rest up before driving back.

At the last minute, the hurricane veered over the tip of Cuba, crossed the Florida Keys and slammed into the Florida panhandle. Mobile, Alabama was underwater. There was flooding in Tampa. And the Tampa Bay baseball team failed to show up for game they were scheduled to play at Yankee stadium. Their plane was grounded. George Steinbrenner said the Yankees should win by default. But at the last minute he backed down. They'd make up the game.

Back in Florida, my mother called to tell me she arrived home safe.

"The second exterminator came," she said.
"Found the nest. End of problem. Those first people shouldn't be in the exterminating business."

"How's your golf?" I asked.

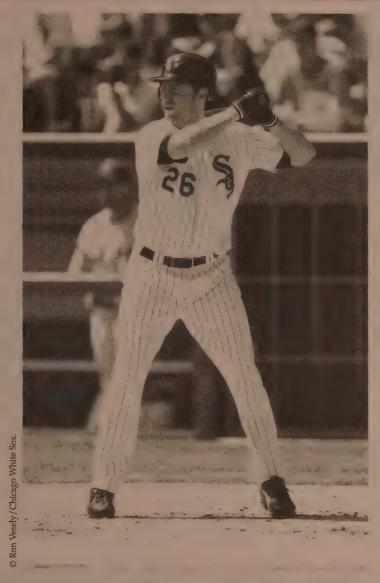

"Terrible," she said. "By the way Cheko is fine."

Four days later, for one hour on Saturday afternoon September 18, the tail of Hurricane Ivan slammed the East End of Long Island with high winds and driving rains. Limbs were knocked down, trees uprooted, cars abandoned in the sudden floods that were created by the deluge of water. Some who had been to Southeast Asia said it was like a typhoon. Others said its violence must have matched what was here during the Hurricane of 1938, although that lasted 10 hours, and this, one. In any case, numerous areas were without power

Ross Gload Of East Hampton Is The Star Left Fielder For Chicago

By Dan Rattiner

The baseball season is winding down as this is written, and few people besides the residents of East Hampton will notice that one particular player, a left fielder for the Chicago

White Sox, is suddenly the hottest ball player in baseball. He is Ross Gload, the young man who went to East Hampton High School and starred in his senior year as a first baseman. Following the All-Star Break in July, he suddenly started hitting at a stunning .400 pace. The White Sox put him into their lineup full time when they saw that this was going on - he had just been a pinch hitter — and he started hitting even better. So far in September, he is hitting .407. As this is written, (Tuesday, Sept 28), he has hit safely in twelve games in a row, hitting a home run in two of them and hitting the clutch hit to win the game in another. Until the All-Star break in early July, he was hitting only about .240 as a pinch hitter. Now his average is .326. He is currently the player with the seventh best batting average in the American League.

What has caused this transformation, Gload is not telling. But as everyone who knows him says, it couldn't be happening to a nicer guy. And there was no one who ever picked up a baseball who ever worked harder to make this

He is now batting fifth in the lineup, and has the highest batting average of any starter on the team.

Gload was born and raised in East Hampton at his family's home on Harrison Avenue in the Springs. His father is a carpenter, his mother works at the Springs School. Dedicated to baseball, Ross has been on the road, making his way slowly up the ladder from the minor leagues for many years, living with other ballplayers. He still considers East Hampton home.

At East Hampton High, all Gload wanted was to be a Major League baseball player. He was around five eleven and a hundred and six> ty pounds in his senior year. A big kid, but not somebody you would think would be big and strong enough to make the majors. And yet, by sheer will and determination, he has done it.

> "I have been lucky over the years to coach lots of kids who loved the game," said his high school coach Jim Nicoletti. "But he put more into it than anybody I've ever seen. At 12, his family made a commitment to him. He would be the best kid he could be.

In the summer, he commuted — his family drove him - to Bayside, Queens, every day so he could play in a summer league. He also commuted to Bayside weekends in the spring and

In his senior year, Ross Gload broke many high school records. In a 28 game season, he had 20 home runs and 63 RBIs.

"It was really strange, but Ross was not heavily recruited by colleges at the time. I think it was because he listed himself as a first baseman. Any power hitter can be taught how to be a pretty good first baseman. It's the only position you can teach somebody like that.

"Anyway, there was finally a call from the University of South Florida. They had one question and I knew what was coming. Can he play the outfield? I told them he could play almost any position better than half the people in the Major Leagues. When can they see him and how far is it from the nearest airport? they asked. Tomorrow, I told them. He's in the County Finals at St. Joseph's College in Patchogue. And its right next door to the airport. Anyway, they came, and Ross won the game. Later, he won the coaches trophy as the best player that year in Suffolk County."

And so Gload went to college on a baseball scholarship, excelling at the University of South Florida, batting .347, .379 and .399 in his three years on the varsity. After graduation, he went to the Major League tryouts. But he didn't make any team. Instead he took a contract at a baseball team representing Utica, New York in the SS-A league. He did not excel. He batted just .244.

For the next four years, he continued to play minor league ball, now in Florida, with varying degrees of success. He played for such teams as Kane County, Brevard County and Portland. In the year 2000, after much of the year playing Triple A ball for a Chicago Cub farm team in Iowa, he came to the attention of the majors. The Cubs could not help but note that he batted a sizzling .404 for Iowa, and so toward the end of the season, they brought him up to play in the majors. He failed dismally. He batted .194, struck out 10 of the 31 times he was up, and got only 6 hits. But he did get his first home run. In the year 2001, he was back in the minors, back at Iowa again, where this time he batted .297.

In the years that followed, he played in the Dominican League, the Mexican League, and for the Triple A teams in Colorado Springs. Once again he was batting over .300. And once again, this was 2002, he got a shot at the majors. He did somewhat better, but nothing to write home about. He came to bat exactly the same number of times as he had two years before, he hit .258 and his number of strike outs went down and his number of runs batted in went up.

In 2003, he played for the triple A team in Charlotte, got traded to the New York Mets franchise for awhile, and finally got traded to the Chicago White Sox. After spring training last year, the White Sox announced he had made the team as a pinch hitter. And perhaps sometimes as a designated hitter. He was now 28 years old.

Gload struggled early on in that role. But his batting average soon settled in around .240 and he could be counted on to be brought in as a threat in the late innings. But then, suddenly, he began hitting at the torrid pace described at the beginning of this article. In late July, he was brought into the regular line up. The rest, as you have seen, is history. He is now batting fifth in the lineup, and has the highest batting average of any starter on the team.

It is a rare occurrence when anyone from one of our local public schools makes the Major Leagues. And everyone who follows baseball is proud of Ross Gload and looks to the box scores every day. He is two for three. He hits a home run. He knocks in two. He's tearing up the league.

I suppose the moral of this story is that persistence pays. But in doing the research for this story, I came across another local boy, born just six months before Ross Gload, who nobody seems to have noticed at all here on the East End. He is P. J. Pierzynski, also 28 years old, who is currently the first string catcher for the San Francisco Giants. (And who is paid $3.3 million a year. Gload will make $330,000 this year.)

P. J. Pierzynski was born in Bridgehampton (continued on page 26)

Reality Martha

Kmart, Jail, Reality TV And Those Pesky Porno Tapes

By Dan Rattiner

Several items about East Hampton's Martha Stewart are in the news this week. One is that Kmart is on the brink of replacing her as a spokesperson. As you know, Kmart has stood by her, through thick and thin, during all her troubles. But now Kmart is revamping its image. Unable to bring to bear any success when trying to compete with Walmart, they are changing course and going after a younger set - something like what Target did when they found they couldn't put a dent in Walmart either. Merchandise will be more hip, colorful and offbeat in a fun sort of way. And that doesn't sound like Martha. Kmart, three months ago, added a new fashion line from a twenty something model named Thalia Sodi and the results were phenomenal. Now Kmart is floating the idea of anointing her with the title of official spokesperson.

The second bit of news about Martha involves a certain new gleam in her eye. Martha senses something.

For starters, in spite of advice from her lawyers, she has requested that the court begin her sentence immediately, and the court has complied. She will serve five months in prison at Danbury beginning on October 8, and after that she will serve an additional five months under home confinement. Not bad when you consider her main residence, a compound of buildings, is also in Connecticut. She should be out of Danbury and in her house just in time to plant a spring garden.

Her troubles will be behind her. And she will have paid her debt to society. It will be a new beginning.

While her lawyers kept the matter in court with appeals, her company stagnated, floundered, but survived. The stock price is only about two thirds of what it once was. And everybody believes the only person who can renew its energy is her. And that's exactly what she will take on.

The upside for her during the last year and a half is several billion dollars worth of publicity — bad publicity, but publicity nevertheless. Not that she needed it, having created an entire new way of looking at the world in her working lifetime — but look at all that publicity. And they say, all that matters is that they spell your name right. For Martha, they have.

I think Stewart will climb back into the driver's seat of her company, but in addition star in a reality TV show. Martha will simply show up at people's homes unannounced. And she will begin throwing out this and bringing in that and painting this and planting that, and the people will either welcome her into their home or try to hustle her out the way she came in.

It's sort of a reverse of YOU'RE FIRED.

And then, I predict, there will be found the long lost porno tape that Martha Stewart starred in — which she will denounce and get indignant about — and that will be even MORE publicity for her.

Then she will run for President.

FLIP FLOPS, MARLON BRANDO AND TWINKIES

By Dan Rattiner

Sometimes things happen and you just don't know what to make of them.

In Berlin, for instance, at the Hamburger Bahnhoff museum, they were holding the opening of a new art exhibit featuring paintings and sculptures from the collection of billionaire Frederich Christian Flick when a woman at one end of the great hall, wearing a red gym outfit, let out a yip and began doing handsprings. She went across the floor for the first five, and then with her sixth, landed on a sculptural assemblage by American artist Gordon Matta-Clark consisting of several cutout sections of wall. He calls it "Office Baroque." In two seconds, this woman smashed it to bits, and then went and did more handsprings, the last of which smashed up something by Matta-Clark called "Graffiti Truck." This is part of several trucks bolted together with graffiti on it. The handspringer smashed in the roof, then went out the door.

According to Otto Hubacek, who is the director of the museum, a guard at the exit door of the hall saw what was going on and, as the woman continued handspringing and zipped out the door, got on his walkie talkie to report what had happened to the higher ups.

It's a big museum. And there are lots of doors to go through, whether upside down or rightside up. And, since she was wearing a red gym suit and was handspringing, once the word got out, she was not hard to catch. At the present time, she is in custody and authorities have not released her name or indicated any motive for what she did.

So there is speculation. One is she hates Americans since she smashed up two American-made sculptures. Two is she was performance artist, and she was just doing her thing in keeping with the event. People heard her say, "Flick, I am satisfied," as she went through. So that might mean she was objecting to Frederich Christian Flick, whose grandfather was a Nazi businessman who made a fortune during World War II and was imprisoned for six years at the end of the war. That would be three. Four was that perhaps she is a fan of John Kerry, the flip-flopper. Or a fan of George Bush who has criticized Kerry's flip-flopping, which would be five. As I said, people just don't know what to make of Another interesting thing in the news is about the late Marlon Brando. He left instruction that he was to be cremated and his ashes mixed with those of the late actor Wally Cox, which it just so happens are in an urn that Marlon has had among his possessions for many years. Wally Cox was most famous as the lead character in "Mr. Peepers," a TV show that was a big hit for about five years in the 1960s. Marlin wants to intermix with Wally forever. I don't get this, either.

The final news item that came to my attention this week is the reported bankruptcy of the company that makes Wonder Bread and Twinkies. I don't know what else they make, but it can't be much, because if they had been smart and bought some health food product like Multi-Grain Energy Bars or Nantucket Nectar into the mix, they probably wouldn't be going bankrupt today. They'd have had a bunch of hippie Vice Presidents to help them along about how to get with it with the candy and the bread.

Instead, what apparently happened was they were sitting around, all these overweight suits, munching on Twinkies, wistfully remembering the days gone by.

"Maybe we should come out with "Wonder Seven Grain Atkins Plan Bread," one of them might have said.

"How about Diet Twinkies?" might have been the reply.

Some companies have seen this transition through. KFC, for example, which if you didn't know, was Kentucky Fried Chicken with a gazillion calories. Now they feature stir fried. I think. Other survivors include Subway and Blimpie, though restaurants with names that included Porky's and Sambo went the way of the dinosaur.

Well, Twinkies and Wonder Bread are goners. What I can't figure is why everybody is so fat in America. Wasn't this change with all the nutrition information on the label and everything supposed to make us all skinny?

for the rest of the afternoon, including Springs and Riverhead.

Late that night, I watched the news. They were interviewing someone in Florida who was standing in the devastation wrought by the hurricanes.

"Ivan knocked this fence down over here, Frances peeled the shingles off the roof. That tree went down when Charley came through."

I called my mother again.

"We had quite a blow here," I told her. "A torrential downpour. High winds. We were without power for five hours."

"But everything's all right?"

"Oh yes. But some people said it must have been like the Hurricane of '38, at least for an hour."

"I think in that hurricane, about a thousand houses got blown away on the East End," she said. "But it didn't hit me or your father. We weren't there then." Five days later, on the morning of Yom Kippur, Hurricane Jeanne, after doing a full loop in the Atlantic, headed for Florida, once again in the general direction of my mother. It was now 12 hours before its scheduled landfall, which they were predicting to be twenty miles north of Palm Beach, so I called my mom again.

"Well, I'm going," she said.

"Where?"

"Temple," she said.

Activists Help To Push Through Suffolk County's Dark Sky Legislation

By Jerry Cimisi

The early autumn is a wonderful time for observing the heavens. The nights are longer but not yet cold. And now, thanks to the efforts of two local individuals, the sky on the East End will be a little more "accessible" this fall.

Suffolk County recently passed legislation that all replacement lighting outside its approximately 1000 government buildings will be fully shielded lighting, illuminating only downward, not upward. This past spring, LIPA agreed on a similar mandate for its plants. And it appears municipalities across the country are considering similar legislation.

All this is part of a genuine groundswell of disparate individuals who over the past decade or so have come to the realization that the night sky was being unnecessarily violated.

It's not that these activists want a total

"lights out at night." Instead, they advocate the use of different fixtures in order to prevent light from illuminating other areas than their generations never saw that.

intended direction.

Jay Schneiderman, the former supervisor of East Hampton, now a Suffolk County Legislator (2nd District, Center Moriches to Montauk), grew up in Hauppauge and Montauk. He recalls about his summers on the East End: "It was incredible the way you could see the Milky Way from the beach."

Susan Harder, a retired art dealer, moved to East Hampton ten years ago. Her house was mostly glass; it was lit up at night by light from a neighbor's house. "It certainly made it difficult to sleep," said Ms. Harder.

As a private citizen, Susan Harder began to research and question the allowable illuminating practices of East Hampton Town. Jay Schneiderman, who, as county legislator, drew up the recently passed bill, was East Hampton Town Supervisor; prior to that, he was Chairman of the Zoning Board. Ms. Harder had gone from finding a neighbor's light a personal annoyance to presenting the town with studies that showed the importance of darkness at night.

Mr. Schneiderman said, "Susan played a critical role, promoting this issue vigorously. I was going to say she's been a beacon of light — let's say she's been a shielded beacon."

Harder spoke at the County Legislature's hearings on the dark sky bill. She is a member of the International Dark Sky Association, whose purpose is "To protect the nighttime environment and our heritage through quality lighting." On organization's website (www.darksky.org) there is an arresting photograph of the starry sky sweeping up from behind a home in Ontario the night of the northeast blackout of August 14, 2003; and the same view, one night later, when most of the stars are once again obscured by lighting.

In a recent interview Ms. Harder related, "It has been shown that light on water prevents plankton from eating algae, which they only do at night. The glare of light on water makes them think it is still day. Too much algae and you get brown tide. So when people worry about brown tide, they might look to our own lights."

She added, "There have been lots of accredited scientific studies in the past few years that show that full darkness at night, sleeping without intruding lights and nightlights have a more restful effect on the body, the circadian > rhythm, and especially on growing children.

> "I don't think people realize how far light pollution travels. The light from the jail in Riverhead (which is technically in Southampton township) can be seen out in Orient. The Nassau County jail is fully shielded. This bill will have an impact not only on the jail here, but on Gabreski Airport, which the county owns.

"It's a domino effect. The East End has a history of introducing laws, especially environmental laws that are taken up elsewhere - like land preservation funds and the banning of temik."

(Temik is a potato pesticide.)

There is currently a statewide law concerning light trespass. If the placement or operation of a light source can be seen from another's property, that is illegal. Specifically, this is not the light itself, but the bulb.

A dark skies/light shielding bill much like Suffolk County's was passed by the New York State assembly this past spring, but the state Senate went into recess before it could be voted upon.

Jay Schneiderman was once a science teacher who has always been interested in astronomy. When he was in East Hampton town government he put together a proposal to have an astronomical observatory at Third House in Montauk. Under Schneiderman, the town moved to shield many of its lights. "I had fully shielded fixtures outside my office," he said.

He added that the reception among county legislators toward a dark sky bill was mostly favorable. There had been a previous proposal by Jon Cooper, a Suffolk County legislator, (8th district, Huntington) to remove all fixtures in place at one time; a lot of people were concerned about the cost. With this bill, replacing fixtures as they burn out, you don't have that."

Schneiderman pointed out the effect the county bill will have on Suffolk as a whole. "The largest landowner in the county is the county itself. It has about a thousand buildings and 12,000 employees."

Michael Lowndes, Director of Public Relations for the Long Island Power Authority, said that LIPA had initiated its dark skies friendly program at its Bridgehampton plant in October, 2003. Other yards, at Riverhead, Greenlawn and Patchogue are following suit, with all of LIPAs yards scheduled to be in compliance by the end of the year.

He said that not only does shielded, downward facing light produce minimal upward glare, but it costs less. "You use less wattage. In some instances we are replacing 1000-watt bulbs with 100 or 50 watts. This is because the light is more focused."

The Rabbi's House

A New Place To Worship On Woods Lane In East Hampton

By Lise Visser

At the entrance to East Hampton, the magnificent, stately trees and hedges that line Woods Lane evoke a sense of tradition and history, two elements that complement the shingle-style Chabad on the south side, the home of Rabbi Leibel Baumgarten and his family, and the new home of Chabad-Lubavitch of the Hamptons.

The Chabad began in a home in the Three Mile Harbor area of East Hampton, then spread from "house to house, people invited me," says the Rabbi. "They opened their homes." The Rabbi spent the last seventeen summer seasons in the Hamptons at the invitation of local residents seeking traditional prayer, inspiration, and reflection, while his family stayed behind in their Coram home and Synagogue. "I left my family on Fridays and from Memorial Day to Rosh Hashanah I was away from my family." The word spread, new friendships formed, and the group grew.

Most recently, services were held in an ocean front home owned by a couple, among the elegant estates on Lilypond Lane, where the crashing of the waves on the shore and the breathtaking natural beauty of the area set the stage for prayer and gatherings. Women were seated in the balcony, overlooking the shawl-covered men. The congregation would assemble in the dining room for kiddush and conversation after prayers.

to live their lives."

It was decided to build the Chabad House in its new locale to welcome those who want a place to learn, discuss, and rejoice in the warmth of a larger home in the Jewish com-nunity.

"This is the first year we are together," says the Rabbi of his year round reunification with his family in their new home. "On Friday at sundown, everything stops for twenty-four hours. This is the spiritual time for the family," he says, adding that "the Chabad is open to all. It is not unusual to have forty people around the table on Friday night and Saturday. Even if not at Synagogue, people are welcome to spend time with us."

The spacious, attractive structure was designed by architect Lynne Breslin Architecture + Design of East Hampton and New York, whose work includes projects with the Brooklyn Botanical Gardens (Bonsai House) and Princeton University (Exhibition, Cotsen Book Collection). The house was built by Larry Zimmerman of Laran Construction in Wainscott.

The children have a playroom set up in the basement. The two-story house has large rooms: living room, dining room, office, it kitchen, bedrooms and baths, and the Rabbi's parents have joined the family in East Hampton. All this on what the realtors call a "shy" acre.

Rabbi Baumgarten says his wife, Goldie, "is my foundation, my drive and encouragement. She is the love of my life, my right hand. The woman is the backbone of the family."

Goldie Baumgarten has conducted women's classes for the Chabad, including cooking. Twenty-five new people came for the challah baking class.

The rabbi and his wife have devoted their lives together to their faith, with a Lubivitcher commitment to "touch each Jew in a positive way. I don't call myself Orthodox. We believe a Jew is a Jew." Indeed, in conversation with the Rabbi one can sense the love that he has for his congregation and for humankind.

One congregant described how much it has meant to her that the Rabbi takes the time to call her and her husband each Friday. The Rabbi states that he has "time for everyone. He is here to give warmth and to help anyone in need from birth to death, one to one. I'm a people's Rabbi. I want to teach, to make people aware, not to tell them how to live their lives. We must be happy, we are not allowed to be sad. We serve G-d with joy. We believe in an afterlife, and purgatory where you pay for your sins, but we don't dwell on this, only the positive."

Goldie Baumgarten is the principal of the Maimonides Day School in Lake Grove, which the Baumgartens founded. There are both Judaic and secular teachers. The complex includes the Lubavitch Torah Educational & Community Center and the Torah Tots Community Pre-School. Their children commute each school day with their mother and the Judaic teachers, who live with them, in a trip that takes about an hour each way. The couple "were blessed with eleven children. But we lost a daughter (Rochel) to meningitis. She suffered for six months. Now there is a vaccination for it."

Their eldest son, Yisroel, 20, is in Hong Kong studying to be a Rabbi. Chana is 18, studying in a seminary in Hollandale, FL. Aizik, Yosssef, Chaya, Zev, Miriam, Leah, Zelig and sevenmenth-old baby, Esther, round out the family.

Rabbi Baumgarten is a fourth generation American who grew up in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn. He considers himself to be "a product of his country and a product of Judaism." He feels it is a privilege to be an "emissary of the Lubavitcher Rebbe, a great leader in the Chabad movement. Lubavitch is the Russian town where the movement was based for over one hundred years, and it means "city of brotherly love." Today, the Rabbi jokes, "you can find two things everywhere: Chabad-Lubovitch and Coca-Cola. Join Lubovitch and see the world!" Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson, the Lubavitcher rebbe, died ten years ago and it is a tribute to him that the Lubivitch movement has doubled in those years.

Rabbi Baumgarten remembers the day he met Goldie in Brooklyn. "We grew up in the same neighborhood and I was friendly with her family. A friend asked if I would like to meet a beautiful girl, and it was love at first sight."

The yearning for tradition has touched the hearts of many local and seasonal residents, those here full time, many with homes both here and in New York City, and people from all over the world who have gathered through the years to make the minyan (the group of ten men required for communal prayers). Chabad, in Hebrew, is an acronym for chachmah (wisdom), da'at (knowledge) and binah (understanding), according to Rabbi Baumgarten.

The Rabbi's outreach includes being the Chaplain for the Suffolk County Correctional Facilities in Yaphank and Riverhead.

Looking to the future, the Rabbi expects to see growth in the Chabad, "but not a large community. Most people are not as observant, but they are seeking something more. The winters are slower." The Chabad has only recently advertised and new people have been coming to services.

Rabbi Baumgarten discusses his garb in the context of the community with good-natured humor, pointing out how unusual a baseball player's uniform looks by comparison. "It's not the outside, but the inside, the heart," that matters, he says, in the town that has welcomed him. "We're so glad you're here," is the message that Rabbi Baumgarten has received. L'Chaim! To life!

By Dan Rattiner

I had coffee with the interior designer Nancy Corzine at her beautiful Bridgehampton home the other morning. We toured the house after we spoke, a magnificent property she built from the ground up and filled with the classic home furnishings and furniture she designs, builds and sells at sales showrooms across the country.

Nancy, a beautiful blond woman, was born and raised in a suburb of Seattle, the oldest child of a mother who was a secretary to the superintendent of schools and a father who was an electrical engineer. It was a middle class environment.

"My dad's family pioneered much of the area we lived in," she told me. "My dad could build anything. My mother came from a prominent Canadian family in Quebec, near Lake Ontario. The family home in which she grew up was a four-story affair on hundreds of acres and is a national monument today. Her great grandfather, my great, great grandfather, was Sir Jeffrey Bridges, who was an Englishman, a gentleman farmer on this property."

Nancy's father built her mother a loom, which she worked on when she came home from her work as a secretary. He also made, for Nancy, a dollhouse, which he urged her to make a home for her doll, "May."

"I was three years old. My mother would weave rugs and pillows and so forth, and, following my instructions, would weave clothes for May. She'd make some. And she showed me how to make some."

At five, Nancy took piano lessons. And at nine, she was preparing lunch for her mother, for when she came home from work for the lunch break.

Nancy's best friend since kindergarten was a member of Seattle's "social set." Her mother weaved too.

"I became part of the social set because of my friend," she said. "Seattle was very provincial then, and there were great divisions between the different social strata. More so even than today. So I grew up in this kind of formal time. Cotillion. White gloves and patent leather shoes. Very low key, but you didn't flash your money. You drove a Chevrolet."

Nancy got married at 17.

"To who?" I asked.

"The wrong person," she said. "A wealthy playboy in Seattle. It didn't last."

For as long as Nancy can remember, she's always wanted to create things of her own design and sell them to people. Perhaps it was just to get their praise. She doesn't know. She designed some of her friend's wedding dresses and evening gowns.

"My first job was in the county library. I was 13 and just walked in there and said I needed a job. They made me a page. I put the books back on the shelves or took books out and put them on reserve for a later pickup overnight.

Who's Here

Nancy Corzine Interior Designer

But this also meant if I found a book I wanted to read I could take it home overnight. I'd read them under the covers by flashlight after I went to bed."

When Nancy was 21, a friend of hers asked her to decorate her home. And she did that. Another friend asked her to do the same thing.

On October 5, Tuesday, Nancy Corzine is to be the gala chair at the annual Alzheimer's Association Rita Hayworth Gala

She also got a job working as a saleswoman at an interior decorating firm. She made no salary but would make a commission for whatever she sold.

"I made a thousand dollars in my first month, a very large sum for that time," she said. "I designed the interior of a bank and an office. Then I designed the showrooms for a Ford agency and a Chevy agency. I had no idea of what I was doing though. I'd go home, feed the kids, then go back to the office to read up on design and see photos of what others had done. I was self taught."

After just a year, her boss at this firm said he was going to have to let her go. She was bringing in so much business he couldn't afford to pay her her commission, and his small staff was not equipped to handle the work. He urged her to set up her own firm. He said he liked being small.

"I really was a very good salesperson," Nancy said. "I'd sell the chairman of the board. Then I'd meet his brother who had an insurance company and I would get that job."

She rented a space by the farmer's market in downtown Seattle. I asked her why she was so successful right out of the box, and she reiterated that she was just really good at sales.

After these early successes Nancy met Fredrick Corzine, the owner of a furniture manufacturing business who sold his merchandise through designer showrooms. They met because they were both active in the City of Hope, a research hospital near Los Angeles that is involved with cancer research. That marriage lasted ten years. But then Frederick Corzine died.

After that, Nancy Corzine and her children moved to La Costa, south of San Diego. There, Nancy worked for a number of years as the associate to interior designer Andrew Gerhard.

"I learned a lot working for him," she said. "I learned that the key to good designing was to be on the same wavelength as your client. If they say they do not care about something, its likely they really do care. Find out about it."

She was involved with the interior design of vacation homes in Las Vegas, boats, planes, retail stores and so forth all over the country. In her fourth year with that firm, she suffered a back injury — doing an installation — and though she made a full recovery, she had to leave the firm for a while. During rehab, and now with her husband gone, she decided she might do something different with her life and perhaps just open an antique store in Los Angeles selling antique reproductions — she had been dealing with lots of factories — but then came the phone

"It was October 15," she told me. I got a call from Louis Catofo, the owner of Intra Designs, who had been hired to do the entire interiof for the new Century Plaza Tower in Los Angeles. He needed to have all the furniture in the public spaces built and in place for January 1, when the Reagans were taking residence there and when they had were having a very important meeting with the Japanese prime minister. It just had to be done. And he did not trust the man he had wanted to supervise the manufacturing to get it done on time."

Nancy said, of course she could get it done on time. And she did. Her next job was doing the design and manufacturing for the interior of the Beverly Hills Four Seasons. She was in business.

She opened her first showroom in Los Angeles, and her second in San Francisco. Today, there are seventeen showrooms around the country that she either owns outright or that feature separate rooms of furniture, rugs, accessories, lamps and textiles that she has designed and built to the highest standards. The hallmark of her work is magnificent finishes, the finest textiles and the most exceptional customer service. Clients choose from a catalogue of over 3,000 products. It is all classic, beautifully constructed and gorgeously designed. Her clients include Donald Trump, President Clinton, Madonna, Brad Pitt, Sharon Stone and many others.

And so we took a walk through her house. "My daughter and I designed the rooms for this house. We hired an architect. And we had him design the house, which we built from the ground up, around the different furniture arrangements. You'll see the corridors and spaces all seem to work perfectly."

We walked through the living room, the dining room, the family room and upstairs through some bedrooms, pantries and bathrooms. It was all gorgeous.

"Many of these pieces I picked out from warehouses I have, where I have had things a very long time. Some of these pieces, this chest of drawers for example, I don't even remember buying. But people say they can look at furniture and say 'oh, that's Nancy Corzine.' My designs come from updated classics of every era. And they are distinguishable. I don't see what other people see. But I can walk through a flea market and pick out one or two pieces. I have my eye."

Victoria, Nancy's oldest daughter works in business with her and runs a showroom. She has two other children, a daughter who is raising a family in Orange County, and a son who runs her showroom in Los Angeles.

On October 5, Tuesday, Nancy Corzine is to be the gala chair at the annual Alzheimer's Association Rita Hayworth Gala at the Waldorf in Manhattan. The charity is now the largest private raiser of funds for medical research in the country and it is hoped that $2 million will be raised at this event.

"I decided I would accept this honor," she told me, "because my mother had Alzheimer's and I took care of her in my home in Marina Del Rey for six years. I had no idea how awful this would be. It takes its toll. She was my closest and best friend and I was her first child. She was a woman who was elegant and charming and never said 'I want.' So I took care of her in her final years. And toward the end we had round the clock nurses. She might wake up in the middle of the night and say, 'Hey I want somebody to talk to me.' You are on call 24/7. I know what Nancy Reagan went through. My mother was 93 when she passed away.

"Princess Yasmin Aga Khan had this happen to her mother, Rita Hayworth. She has worked tirelessly at raising money to find a cure for the last twenty years. And Forrest Labs have made such strides, and we are so close to many things."

of Polish-American parents who were in the potatoes packing business here. He did go to school here, but when he was in sixth grade, his parents sold the packing operation and moved to Florida. Young Pierzynski, who had already shown talent to play baseball, went to a high school in Florida that specializes in teaching baseball, and in the same year that Gload graduated East Hampton, Pierzynski

You know, they say that privilege has its benefits, and in baseball, the privileged go to Dr. Phillips and the Major League teams look over the graduates very carefully. Right from high school, Pierzynski was drafted by the Minnesota Twins who sent him to the minors for two years, then brought him up as their first string catcher.

In the last eight years, Pierzynski has been batting in and around .300 and has been one of the two spark plugs on the team. At six foot three, he is almost 250 pounds of solid muscle. He has good instincts, often swinging at the first pitch thrown, and is a great clutch hitter. He also reportedly does not get along well with either his teammates or with others. He has graduated Dr. Phillips High School in Orlande. occasionally been thrown out of games, the last time arguing about a foul ball. He also was one of those asked to testify in a doping scandal in Minnesota last year, but at the last minute, was excused from testifying. Pierzynski is a tough, tobacco-chewing, excellent ball player who last year hit .312 playing full time and could, as he enters his prime, be a candidate for the hall of fame if he pulls his game up a notch. But when Minnesota, at the beginning

> One cannot imagine a ball player less likely to be in San Francisco, a town of cappuccinos, writers, wine and struggling artists, than A. J. Pierzynski. And from the start, the press lit into him. In just the second game of the season, an hour and a half before the game, he failed to respond when his coach told him he had to get together with the starting pitcher to go over the roster of the other team. He was playing cards. And he wasn't done. He played on for the next twenty minutes.

would play full time as the catcher there.

"I never heard of this before," one of the San Francisco players said to a reporter. "This just isn't done.'

A few days later, Pierzynski was interviewed on ESPN in San Francisco about the trade, facing some fans who had called in by phone. Here is a part of the transcript of that inter-

A. J.: Hi. It's me. Sorry I'm late.

Ben (from MN): They say there was an altercation earlier this year that may have led to the trade. What altercation?

A. J. No there was no altercation. I did not demand a trade as Jim Souhan reported earlier this week. I spoke with him about the article and he told me that he was going to tell my side of the story. So far that has not happened.

Sheltered Islander #318
Duct Tape: Now, A Thousand and One
Uses!

"Assc. Press Wed Sep 22, 4:38 PM ET DUN-LAP, Ind. — An outraged father of a seventh-grader says an assistant principal duct-taped his son's pants to keep them from sagging then sent him back to class. Scott Allison told the Concord School Board on Monday that his 12-year-old son, Spencer, said last week that a teacher noticed the boy's underwear was showing above his pants, a violation of Concord Junior High School's dress code. She sent him to Assistant Principal Patricia Walters, who told Spencer to pull up his pants and tuck in his shirt, Allison said. 'This outrages me and shocks me' Allison said."

This inspires me! An 11-year-old sporting the "gansta" look? Bring on the duct tape!

Ahhh....Duct tape.... just when you thought you knew all it's uses and wonders, now, a teaching tool!

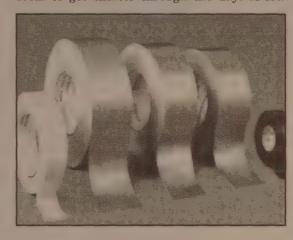

If I were a teacher, I would be soooo inspired by this article! Just think of the uses of duct tape in a classroom...

Does looking at nose rings, eyebrow rings, lip rings, belly rings, annoy you? Just cover them with a small square of duct tape. You're not violating the student's right to express themselves and you are blocking a repugnant visual effect at the same time....

Don't you hate it when kids with tongue bars talk to you and you can see the bar through their tongues and it clicks against their teeth as it impairs their ability to articulate speech? Just take a six inch length of duct tape and cover their mouths. They have every right to have a tongue bar and they also have the right to remain silent, so you're guaranteeing two of their basic rights with one strip of duct tape!

Do you have students who constantly forget their pens, pencils and calculators? Duct tape these items to there forearms — how easy is that? They don't have to strain to be responsible for themselves which helps to alleviate all the stress they have to take drugs for.

Got trouble with girls wearing skirts that seem to get shorter through the day? A few squares of duct tape adhering the skirt to the standard of two inches above the knee at the beginning of the day takes care of the whole problem!

Got trouble with boys wearing those droopy drawers with the waistband at the level of their privates and the crotch at the knee? Follow this school's example. Jerk those pants up and duct tape them around their hips! Another problem solved...

How about those students that can't remember to take home the right book to do homework? Duct tape that book against their chests. Just roll the duct tape around the whole kid one complete circle and end it in the front so they can peel it off easily when they get home and are ready to start their homework.

Do you have annoying and disruptive students in your class? There's always a few I would imagine... Well, why bother assigning them to useless detention where batches of them can drive the detention teacher crazy? And why send them to the principal's office which would embarrass them? Wouldn't it be better just to duct tape them to the wall outside the classroom? First of all, you know where they are. Second, it allows the student to develop a career as a performance artist by being 'wall art'. This helps their self-esteem as they get more and more of the attention they seek. Third, as the good students who were not disruptive leave the class, they can also become part of the performance art by playing 'Smack The Idiot' as they pass by on the way to the next class. Clearly a win-win situation.

I was one of those kids who always jiggled her leg. Lots of kids jiggle their legs and tap pencils constantly. How I would have appreciated someone taping my leg to my chair. My nervous habit would have stopped and the depilatory effect of duct tape is terrific. I would have saved a fortune on shaving cream and ra-

Worried about teen pregnancies? I give you duct tape-the chastity belt. Teacher's probably shouldn't put a duct tape chastity belt on students. But, you can send home a flyer with instructions for the parents. Most Dads have duct tape in the house.... And in the interest of gender equality, I give you duct tape-the condom. The adhesive on the tape probably has some spermicidal qualities so you get that nice physical and chemical combination barrier.

Duct tape, the teaching and parenting tool....an idea whose time has come.

atrist to help her unravel this insanity, but her father was lying in the hospital, and her mom had her own worries, and it was better to just go on until she could get out. Graduation was only a few weeks away. Then she would move away to college. Then she would never look back.

The next night, as Phoenix lay in bed, she heard his familiar footfalls on the shingles, and her heart beat faster. Tonight, she would end it, tell him once and for all this was the last time, and send him away. Phoenix did not think her mom would interfere, though there was always that alarming possibility.

The window screen rattled loudly, which was not like him, and Phoenix sat bolt upright, blinking in the darkness. She saw a strange, wide face through the glass — not his! She didn't know whether to scream, run, or stay quiet. She saw now that it was Eddie Sanders, the football player with whom she'd once had an altercation. If she screamed she knew her mom would be through the door in ten seconds, probably with a loaded gun. Or her mom, already strung out, would call the police. None of them needed a scandal right now. Phoenix moved to slam the window down and lock it, but just as her hands reached the frame, it shot upward and Eddie Sanders tumbled through and landed on his stomach crossways on the bed.

"What are you doing? What do you want?" she said in a terrified whisper.

In a voice gruff with alcohol, Eddie Sanders said, "Cole says you'll put out for any guy crazy enough to sneak in here. He even told me how to unlatch the screen."

Jay Schneiderman is still pushing for an observatory at Third House. There could be star parties there. This might not seem the most important thing in the world, but there is hardly denying a certain innate human longing, at least an appreciation for the night sky.

Harder said, "One night an astronomer friend and I were at Louse Point with a telescope. It was around midnight. Some teenagers came by. We treated them to a bit of stargazing. They were really impressed. One of them he was going to take astronomy

Jay Schneiderman said, "Seeing the stars at night — it's a really important thing. It's part of respecting the magnitude of the universe. In Montauk, you can see the Milky Way dip down into the ocean. Imagine if other generations never saw that. Not to see the celestial world that guided human history. People navigated by the stars, planted by the stars. If you could never see beyond the clouds, you would lose your perspective. If you can see the stars, you can dream of other worlds."

F. It will be nice to have a dependable, longterm catcher for the first time in a long time. I'm curious how you follow the off-season movement. Do you find out about the Giants moves on ESPN or the Internet?

A. J. Yes, I follow the moves via the Internet and on ESPN. I also sit around and hope the Giants will sign whoever it will take to get us a World Series win.

Tom (Bridgehampton, NY): Hey A.J., I talk to your uncle on a semi-regular basis, we're all proud of you back in Bridgehampton. I played ball against Ross Gload in East Hampton and he was the best player I ever saw on a high school level. He broke like every Long Island baseball record then, but didn't get drafted. You didn't end up going to high school in New York. Do you think your career would have been greatly hindered (like not getting drafted) if you ended up staying on Long Island?

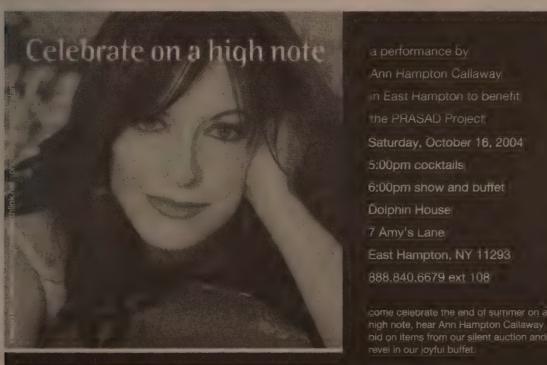

A. J. Tell my family there hello.

At the present time, Pierzynski is batting .272 for the Giants. Pretty good. But he started bad mouthing some of the other players.

And recently he's reported to have said he wants to be traded.

The award Gload won in 1994 as Suffolk County's player of the year was, and is, called the Carl Yazstrezmski Award. It is named after the greatest Major League baseball star that ever grew up here out east. Yaz was also the son of a Bridgehampton potato farmer, graduating in 1957 from the Bridgehampton School, and he has played almost his entire career for one Major League team. In 1967, he won the Triple Crown, posting the highest batting average, the most home runs and the most runs batted in in the American League that year. It was a feat done about ten times before in the history of baseball, and never since. Yazstrezmski is in the Hall of Fame. But he never won a World Series and never played in one. And maybe that was because he played entirely for the Boston Red Sox.

Gload. Pierzynski. Two local boys, both born here, one bred here. Maybe one of them will follow in Yaz's footsteps. They are both entering their primes. We shall see.

Hidden Treasure

New Orchestra Tosses Convention Out And Invites The Audience In

The Hidden City Orchestra revealed the past, present and future of music, dance and art to its audience at Riverhead's Vail-Leavitt Music Hall last Friday night. The premiere performance in this lovely restored theatre conjured up echoes of performances of the past while the orchestra provided its audience with a kaleidoscope of sound, sight and movement. Throughout the evening, the audience was surrounded by music emanating from the stage as well as from surrounding boxes while performers mingled with the audience. Out of the corner of one's eye, neon-colored batons could be seen twirling as dancers circled the theatre while a singer, violinist and drummer's music could be heard drifting down. The hall was filled with rhythm and light with sights and sounds coming from all directions. The orchestra, headed by Greenport composer George Cork Maul, has been concentrating its creative efforts on preparing for this performance for two years, and the sincerity and earnestness of each performer was evident throughout the evening. Believing that "music is the language of the emotions," Maul led the orchestra to capture hidden city orchestra

feelings through all the senses. The audience members, both young and old, were caught up in the creative energies of improvisation as each per-ing tied the performances together. The audience also had the opportunity to play "Pin the Tail on the Tonality" by selecting a range in which the orchestra would play while improvising, and the reading of Einstein's Credo put into words the feelings that were being evoked by this orchestra's performance: "Although I am a typical loner in daily life, my consciousness of belonging to the invisible community of those who strive for truth, beauty and justice keeps me from feeling isolated."

Maul believes that we are surrounded by creative people who just need the opportunity and circumstance in which to interact creatively, and he has provided a venue for a group of innovative performers to engage in their passions. Each member of the orchestra comes from a different walk of life but each shares a common vision of the power of music, dance and performance. For example, Susan Blacklocke, a crafter and photographer, used her ribbon-like batons in spiral patterns as she glided around the hall during the performance. Jody Brown, a carpenter, played his guitar while Bob Hovey, a professional trombonist, provided a mesmerizing musical theme. A. Gabriel Kastelle, the haunting violinist, spends his days son became a part of the experience. The performance consisted of six vignettes, each highlighting the creative energies of the individual performers. During most of the segments Riverhead painter, Helen Smith Jones, interpreted the music and movement on canvas for the audience to enjoy, and

Who's Who On The North Fork: George Cork Maul

George Cork Maul is a composer, pianist and performance art specialist living and working in Greenport. He studied 12-tone composition with Nemiroff at Stony Brook where he earned a B.A. and went on to do graduate work in electronic music with Bulent Arel and study classical style with Charles Rosen. After touring for several years and working as a studio musician, Maul began composing a wide range of serial and tonal music. His credits include modern songs, suites and dance pieces, contemporary operas, musicals and software music. His compositions have been performed in Ireland, Canada and the United States. He is currently composing a commissioned piece for the Long Island String Quartet and a duet for cello and piano. He often performs at North Fork vineyards, Long Island libraries, art openings and other venues.

Saying "Yes" (Again) To Chardonnay

"I don't like Chardonnay."

I hear this all the time when I talk to friends, family and even strangers on the street about wine. I've even said it to myself as I choked down a heavy, buttery, oak-filled Chard, usually hailing from California. These wines are difficult to pair well with food and, unless you enjoy the flavor of American, French or some other region's oak trees, it's no wonder many people don't like them.

Fact is, you've probably never really tasted this most noble of all white wine grapes. Through barfermentation and excessive aging in new oak, many winemakers so manipulate Chardonnay's pure, fruity character that it's nearly unrecognizable once in the glass. It's like making a hamburger from center-cut filet mignon and then drowning it with condiments. This may be tasty to some, but at what point is it not really filet mignon anymore?

Luckily, some talented winemakers on Long Island believe in the purity of the grape's true character. Through more judicious use of oak, or by not using it at all, they make some truly unique Chardonnays that are unlike any you've wrapped your tongue around.

If you really think you don't like Chardonnay, and are sick of drinking Sauvignon Blanc, Riesling or Gewürztraminer, Long Island offers several Chardonnays you should try. Remember, however, that any "Reserve" Chardonnay is probably going to be oaky and you should avoid those if it's the fresh and the fruity that you crave.

So leave your ABC (Anything But Chardonnay) membership cards at home and try a couple of the Macari Vineyards' 2003 Early Wine ($12) is 100 percent Chardonnay, but I bet you'd never have guessed. Harvested in late September, bottled around Halloween and released just before Christmas, it is one of the crispest, freshest whites you'll ever drink. With gentle lime flavor, green apple tartness and just a hint of sweetness, it's extremely easy to drink. Just 400 cases were made and the 2003 vintage has sold out, but the 2004 is on its way this December.

Another excellent example of an unoaked Chardonnay is offered by Peconic Bay Winery. Their 2002 Steel Fermented Chardonnay ($13) is fruit-forward with lemon and lime - simple with just the right amount of acidity. It's a great wine with food.

Two of my favorites are made by Channing Winery in Bridgehampton: Daugthers Channing Daugthers 2003 Scuttlehole Chardonnay ($14) and Channing Perrine 2001 Mudd Vineyard Cuvee Tropical Chardonnay ($17). The Scuttlehole is fermented in stainless steel and features elegant citrus and mineral character. It's an excellent example of cold climate Chardonnay.

The Cuvee Tropical is one of the most unique Chardonnay experiences you'll ever have. Made with the musque clone of Chardonnay, it is overflowing with exotic fruit, including mangoes and pineapples that linger on the tongue.

Yet another Chardonnay that dodges the adulteration of oak fermentation is the 2003 Bridge Lane Chardonnay ($13) from Lieb Family Cellars. Made in an approachable style, it's even fruitier and more refreshing than the 2002 release, delicious by itself or paired with lobster or shrimp.

These wines, along with many other Long Island Chardonnays, are available both at the various vineyard tasting rooms and in local wine shops. Note that many of them are great buys and that's because they don't spend much, if any, time in expensive oak barrels. Cheaper to make means cheaper to buy.

conducting research in biochemistry, and Terry Keevil is the principal oboe with Lazar Gosman's Tchaikovsky Orchestra as well as the Manhattan Chamber Orchestra and Choir of Sacred Music.

Maul's paradoxical philosophy can be summed up in the statement, "Music is the silent commentary that plays between the words in our lives." Through his leadership, the Hidden City Orchestra has come together to improvise and provide a unique experience for its audience. The performance was reminiscent of the "happenings" of the sixties in which the energy of the fifties music could really be felt. Improvising can also be traced back to the Jazz Age of the twenties and into the thirties with Big Bands music. The Vail-Leavitt

Music Hall gave the performance a sense of time and place. Built as an opera house in 1881, the hall hosted acting troupes, lecturers, writers, artists, politicians and conventions. In 1908, the Leavitt family bought the building and ran a clothing store on the ground floor. During this time, Thomas Edison used the opera house as one of his sites for early trials of the kinetoscope. Over the years, the hall fell into disuse. Fortunately, in the late 1970s, actor Harold Smith founded the Council for the Vail-Leavitt Music Hall and the council began to renovate and restore the hall. The restoration is thrilling with brilliant color and architectural design from the late 1880s. In addition to being treated to the creativity of the orchestra and the ambience of the hall, the audience received a delightful handbill as a souvenir of the evening. In the handbill each of the members of the orchestra was highlighted in his own made-to-be-cut-out playing card. This handbill illustrated this group's creativity and capacity to just plain have fun. The performance was delightful and hopefully just a start to future evenings of music and dance by Hidden City Orchestra at the Vail-Leavitt.

AWAY AT SCHOOL... By David Lion RATTINER

Avoiding Stardom

I was riding my bike down Marlborough Street on my way to Beacon Hill where I work part time duiing the school year as a valet parker. I was running late, only ten minutes, but this is a very bad thing when it comes to employers. So I was dialing my boss on my cell phone while riding my bike and also dodging traffic. In doing so, I considered adding the words "multi-tasking" to my resume. I started to think about whether or not it should be "multi-tasking" with a dash or "multi tasking," as two words. My boss answered the phone. "Hello

"Yes, hi, I'm on my way right now. I should be there in about ten minutes.'

"That is going to make you twenty minutes late, Dave, we can't have blah blah blah." My boss is a

"Yeah, I know I'm really sorry, I...umm...A MOVIE!"

"What?"

"I got caught up on Marlborough Street, they are shooting a movie here and they are making me turn around.

"Okay, well get here as soon as you can."

It was as if the late gods came down from the skies and blessed me. There was a movie shoot right in the middle of the street. I couldn't believe it. There were trailers and trucks and lights, everything. You never see this kind of stuff in Boston. You see it in New York all of the time but in Boston it is really rare. I got off of my bike and started to snoop around. Everyone was really quiet and looking to see if they could catch any celebrities. I asked around the crowd and they were telling me that there was a new movie coming out about a crazed Red Sox fan in it. Drew Barrymore is supposed to be nearby.

I started to wonder if maybo I could casually get myself into this movie somehow. I thought that this was possible. Maybe I could walk right up to the director, ask him about how he liked Boston and convince him somehow that I would make a perfect actor for a part in the movie. They would think of something on the spot. Maybe I would get lucky. Maybe the role of "the college roommate of the crazed Red Sox fan" got really sick and needs to be replaced immediately. This could be my route to Hollywood. This could be my big break, right here, all because I was running ten minutes late. I started seeing the future interviews on VH1, where I tell them this very story. I was seeing myself as host of "Saturday Night Live," and it going down in history as being one of the funniest episodes of the season.

Then it hit me that if I walked up to the director and started to talk to him, he would be on to me. He would know exactly what I was doing and call security. Maybe I should just walk by him and he would get a glimpse of me and see my potential, chase me down the street and beg me to be in his movie.

I would act like I wasn't interested and this would drive him even more crazy. He would then offer me a trailer and I would agree. All I would have to do is walk by him with an attitude, a movie star attitude that only movie stars possess, and he would pick up on it. I would act shocked that he was interested, pretend I had never done any acting before, then, when I read a couple of lines, blow everyone away. This happens all of the time I think. Stars are born this way and make big movies, all because a director sees their potential. I think this is how Julia Roberts' career started, but I am not really sure.

I was frozen solid with my bicycle. A security guy was asking me if I wanted to go through before they started shooting. I hesitated for a second, debating with myself on what to do. I decided to go with the attitude bike ride across the street and show my stuff instead of trying to get in good with the director. I hopped on my bike, gave a nod to the security guard and rode off. This was my big chance, my one shot.

I made it across the street and could feel the stares from the director. But there was no yelling. I considered looking back, but didn't want to make what I was doing look obvious. I was fully committed, halfway down the street now. I was sure that a limousine was going to cut me off at the end of the

I made it to work...thirty minutes late.

Intrepid Museum

On the way up to the Adirondacks for my yearly summer trip, I took the usual route to 87 via the West Side Highway. As my hungover companion drooled on the window while wrapped pathetically in the sheet he stole from his buddy and host from a long night in the city, we passed the grandest ship in Manhattan. The aircraft carrier Intrepid dwarfed the coastline and I longed for my fiancée, Colleen, who couldn't make it this year due to a busy work schedule. Later, I realized that the ship had me thinking about her because Colleen's father, Ray Tucker, had served there during the Vietnam War. I've been to the Intrepid Museum many times throughout my life. Each visit has illuminated something new, and it is a fun and educational experience for virtually anyone from little kids to octogenarian veterans.

The USS Intrepid Museum is different from most museums because rather than being a building filled with artifacts, it is the artifact. Of course, the vessel is filled with plenty of objects and tools from its long and rich history of military service, but the carrier itself is the main event. The USS Intrepid, CV-11 launched in 1943 and served the United States Navy for 31 years. During World War II, the Essex Class ship suffered 7 bombings, 5 kamikaze attacks, and one torpedo in the treacherous Pacific Campaign. Repairs were always successful in returning her to action, and it earned her the reputation as "The Ghost Ship" to the enemy. After the war, a new angled flight deck and other modernized accoutrements enabled the carrier to fulfill the needs of jet aircraft. In the more peaceful beginnings of the 1960s, she took on the task of recovery for NASA, retrieving both the Mercury and Gemini space cap-

Ray was aboard the Intrepid in 1967 as she made the journey to the Gulf of Tonkin to assist with the war in Vietnam. He described life on the ship as being a "self-contained city" where the food was always good and hot, and after a hard day working with the "Buddy Stores," or in-flight refueling tanks for A-4 attack planes - he always had a bed to rest his head. R&R came every 7-14 days when they came to port, and he even told of one day when they were permitted to swim off the boat on their way to their final destination. Marines had to be sent as armed escorts to defend against the threat of sharks, but the memory of paddling around in that beautiful sea in the shadow of a giant warship seems to be a fond one, not to mention unique. Some days Ray still looks down at the ship from his job on 47th Street and 6th Ave. The Intrepid officially retired in 1974 after 3 tours of duty in Vietnam and a stint tracking Soviet Subs during the Cold War. "The Fighting I," as she was known to be called, was saved from her destiny as scrap metal by the Intrepid Museum Foundation and opened to the public in August of 1982.

Today, visitors can view over 25 aircrafts spanning the history of flight on board the 900-foot aircraft carrier. Many were actually aboard the Intrepid during operations, while others have been brought in as examples of the exceptional work done by our military over years of innovation. This year, the British Airways "Alpha Delta" Concorde has been added to the collection. The Concorde is the fastest airliner ever to enter commercial service, making the fastest Atlantic crossing in only 2 hours, 52 minutes, and 59 seconds. Her cruising altitude is 60,000 feet, and her top speed is Mach 2.04. Also on display is the only intact strategic nuclear missile submarine open to the public anywhere in the world. The USS Growler, SSG 577 first went on display in 1989, and it is quite an experience to climb aboard and picture the conditions in which her crew was forced to live. The sub and the Concorde are terrific examples of how the Intrepid Museum is always changing, updating, and opening new windows into the life of Military men. Also see the "Remembering 9/11" exhibit. Considering the times we're living in, this is a must see for folks looking for a glimpse into the lives of our men and women abroad.

The Intrepid Sea-Air-Space Museum is located on Pier 86 at 12th Ave. & 46th Street. Call (212) 245-0072 or visit www.intrepidmuseum.org for more info.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

CMD. Cars of mass destruction. For decades, vehicles of all sizes and shapes have been fictionalized in media as cars of mass destruction. Take Stephen King's "Christine" for example. That cute little '57 Plymouth hardtop certainly murdered enough people to put a dent in Plymouth sales among the squeamish. The single vehicle that probably caused more mass mayhem than any other car in the movies was the bluesmobile. Who can forget the hundreds of wrecked police cars that the bluesmobile left in its wake of mass traffic mayhem?

That tricky "Q" outfitted Commander Bond's original Aston Martin DB-4 with machine guns, rear oil slick capability aimed at pursuing cars, bullet proof armor and a unique hubcap spinner that would protrude at the flick of a switch to cut to pieces any adjacent car's bodywork. Also of note is the diabolical ejector seat that could mass destruct members of S.P.E.C.T.R.A. one by one. When it comes to CMDs, the Bond car is one of the greats.

Another memorable car, the '68 Mustang fastback that Steve McQueen drove in the film Bullett is most famous for not only flying down the hills of San Francisco, but for being in a film that created the contemporary car chase genre. The street racing footage in this film, between the Mustang and the bad guys Dodge Charger, is part of Hollywood legend, because all of it was shot way before digital special effects were invented. Dangerous authentic stunt driving.

Herbie, Walt Disney's little Volkswagen Beetle, certainly did its share of mass destruction, but it was done in such charming Disney fashion that it was comical. Don't kid yourself, Herbie the Volkswagen was one of the great cars of mass destruction. Sorry, kids.

Forget fiction. In real life there are many cars of mass destruction. In World War I, Rolls Royce chassis were converted into armored cars. Hispano-Suiza engines were used in aircraft and Dr. Porsche designed many military vehicles. In World War II, Dr Porsche was still designing military vehicles, Packard was making engines for PT Boats, and our little Jeep was leaving tire tracks everywhere.

When one thinks about it, race cars are really designed to be cars of mass destruction. They are made to destroy the competition and, hopefully, destroy existing records. The world's first land speed record was set in 1898 by a French nobleman in Acheres, France, driving a Jeantaud electric car. Perhaps a portent of things to come? This Frenchman's astonishing speed was 39.24 miles per hour. France held the world speed record until 1904 when Mr. Vanderbilt, yes, that Mr. Vanderbilt, drove a ninety horsepower Mercedes Simplex in Daytona Beach at 92.28 miles per hour. By the thirties, speeds really picked up, with England's Donald Campbell driving his Rolls Royce powered Bluebird at 272.23 miles per hour at Daytona in 1933. In 1964

Campbell's Bluebird, now powered by a 4,000 horsepower jet engine, did 403 miles per hour. The current land speed record is now over one thousand miles per hour. All of these vehicles are true CMDs because they have continued to break world records decade after decade.

Road racing cars have always been designed to destroy the other competitors on the race track. In the early days of automobile manufacturing, everyone raced to prove his vehicle's superiority. Henry Ford himself drove modified Model Ts in competition. Duesenberg, Fiat, Maserati, along with Alfa Romeo, Bugatti and Mercedes were all players in the high stakes racing game. The great Italian Alfa Romeo P2 and the French Bugatti Type 35 destroyed most of the competition during the twenties. In the thirties, it was Mercedes and Auto Union. In between world wars, the genius automotive engineer, Dr. Ferdinand Porsche designed some of the greatest race cars the world had ever seen. All the Grand Prix winning Auto Unions and Mercedes Benz race cars had Porsche design in their DNA.

Other race cars designed as CMDs included the Ford GT 40, which was produced specifically to beat the Ferraris. The Porsche 917 was designed to trounce all competition. Which it did. Today, from the delicate European Formula One cars, to the brutish and faster American NASCAR sedans, to the World Rally Championship lightweight four wheel drive buzz bombs, there are all types of CMDs being built. You can read about them in newspapers and magazines, and see them on television. These CMDs exist everywhere and don't need UN inspectors to find them.

Shop 'til You Drop ... With Maria Tennariello

The weather being close to perfect, it makes my job so much easier. Too chilly to take a swim at the beach, the next best thing for me to do is to go shopping. Let's do it.

I would like to share with my readers a little information about a local jewelry designer and owner of Good Ground Botanicals located in Hampton Bays. Good Ground Botanicals has found a creative way to help women feel special in their fight against breast cancer, as well as raise funds for breast cancer awareness. Christine Laureano has inspired designs of rose quartz, pearls and silver for a bracelet, an anklet and earrings that also carries a silver breast awareness ribbon. The jewelry also comes with a card that describes the healing properties of the gemstones. The jewelry was introduced to the Breast Health Center in June 2004. A display can be seen in the Breast Health Center of the Breast Awareness and Ellen's Run; the jewelry can be purchased at the center or through Christine directly. Bracelets are $45, anklets $48, with 30% of each purchase being donated back to the center, Ellen's Run or breast cancer research. Sales from June to August have already raised nearly $1,000 to be donated back to the Breast Health Center and Ellen's Run. Every little bit helps in the fight against breast cancer. For information call Christine Laureano at 631-728-7724 or email her at ggbotanicals@aol.com

At The Old Quogue Farm Florist & Greenhouse on Old Depot Road and Montauk Highway in Quogue, they are celebrating their first year with an anniversary sale. All gifts are 25% off and there are specials every day. This shop is filled to the rafters with candles and mists, plush stuffed animals, fruit and gourmet baskets, gifts, cards, plants and so much more.

September is almost gone...At Casual Home on County Road 39 in Southampton you can save 10% on your purchases anytime this month. There are only a few days left for this sale, so get going.

Kreiss on Montauk Highway in Southampton is having its biggest sale of the year, marking down every item in the showroom and all floor samples, including luxury bed linen. There is also up to 50% off on select merchandise. The sale runs from Friday, October 1 through Sunday, October 3.

Nearby at Pier One Imports on Montauk

Good Ground Botanicals, Hampton Bays

Highway, you will find a very interesting "Welcome Home" sale going on right now. You can bring fall indoors with some harvest pumpkin spice quartet candles, on sale from $8 to $12, Bohemian bloom pillows, on sale from $20 to $24, or the Dharma mirror that is framed in hand-carved wood overlay with hand-crafted metal, on sale for a cool $119, just to name a few.

Bridgehampton's Christian K. Andrews Ltd., located at 7 Tradesman Path in Bridgehampton (off Butter Lane) is having their "end of the season sale" on European and Asian furniture and accessories. This is one shopping adventure you should take and enjoy.

For outside your home, visit Walpole

Woodworkers, located on Montauk Highway in Water Mill to save from 20% off on all lanterns, rockers, mailboxes, teak and all weather wicker furniture, weathervanes, and more. There is 10% off small buildings designed by Royal Barry Wills, cupolas, cedar, iron and vinyl fencing. If you've never been here, it's about time you take a look and see for yourself the unique and beautiful merchandise.

At Verizon Wireless in the Bridgehampton Commons you can take advantage of the "Buy one Get one Free Blowout" sale that is offered right now. Two lines for $59.99 and buy one phone get one free. What a deal!

Bombay in the Bridgehampton Commons is stealing the show with their exclusive "Glamour Collection" that is inspired by the Hollywood era of the 1930s and 1940s. If you use the coupon in Dan's Papers (last issue), you will get $50 off any purchase of $200 or more or $20 off any purchase of $100 or more. I can spend that in five minutes at this store. I never walk out empty handed. Look for their clearances and holiday merchandise that arrives daily.

At D.J. Hart on Main Street in Sag Harbor, look for fabulous new fall arrivals that come in on a daily basis. This year fashion is about ponchos, pins, vintage brooches, funky jewelry and funky sweaters. D.J. Hart fits that bill nicely. Until next week. Ciao and happy fall shopping!

If you are having a sale, know of one, or have any shopping questions for me, please email me at: shoptil@danspapers.com. I will be happy to hear

View From Four Feet

Brushing your teeth should be simple enough; it is, after all, part of most peoples' daily routine. Yet for some reason I'm finding it difficult this evening.

"It's easy!" exclaims my six-year-old sister, Leah, encouragingly. She reaches up and places her small hands on the porcelain sink. Grunting slightly, she heaves her entire body up onto the edge of the sink, balancing only on her hips and left arm. With her right she begins to scrub her teeth with utmost ease, carefully aiming and spitting bubblegum flavored toothpaste into the sink.

"If you want to act like a kid, this is how you brush," she instructs, relishing her newfound role as teacher. "If you stay down there you'll spit toothpaste all over the floor!"

from a smaller standpoint.

I have forgotten how troublesome being 3 ft. 12 can be. When I ask Leah to show me the world from a child's point of view, she insists I get on my knees.

"How many six-year-olds do you know as tall as you?" she says, as if crawling on my knees was the obvious course of action. In retrospect, however, she has a fair point. In order to understand a child's perspective, it is necessary, literally, to see the world

But I am finding it next to impossible to heave myself onto the sink with two hands, let alone one. And yet somewhere in the back of my mind I remember doing this every day. How many other small habits have faded into a mere shadow of a memory, almost out of existence?

Although most adults claim to recall their lives as children, Leah paints a very different picture from what adults remember. She is looking at me with an expression of mingled amusement and pity and decides brushing teeth is too strenuous a task for me. She leads me to her bedroom, which looks as if a toy shop exploded inside, transfiguring it into a jungle of Barbies, pudgy pastel unicorns, board games, playschool dolls, and collectors cards. We both manage to maneuver through the mess to her bed.

I ask if her Mommy or Daddy makes her clean up her room, to which she gives an exasperated sigh.

"That's grownups!" she cries, pounding her little fist on the mattress. "It's their job to tell us kids what to do and sometimes it can be very confusing! You know, I don't think older people remember what it was like being small, puny, and tiny....it's a very different attitude." Leah stops for a moment and does a somersault on the bed. "Grownups don't do a lot of the same stuff we do. Like they don't trust kids!

That's why they always keep an eye on you. They wouldn't let NO ONE keep an eye on them! How unfair is that?" She stands up and proudly shakes her fist. "They all have an eye on me! That's another thing..."

Leah's view on trust strikes as somewhat chilling; she really know that trusting others is an issue adults struggle with. It is extraordinary such a profound understanding can be made at such a young age.

I go to the Internet.

"Trust?" asks 8 year-old Christina Washer. "I don't think grownups use that a lot. I don't even think Mommy trusts Daddy a lot of the time."

It is unsurprising children grow into untrusting adults when they live every moment under ever-watchful eyes.

"I'd be really creeped out if I was being watched all the time because there is no "off" time to just unwind and relax," Justin Rivers, Boston University junior, says with discomfort.

"I think Grownups are always watching us because they're always scared," Leah says thoughtfully. "Not of make-believe things but mainly of their kids getting hurt. But the big thing is..." she pauses as if trying to find the right words.

"They have no imagination."

"No imagination at all?" I blurt without thinking. "What about writers like Roald Dahl? Or JK Rowling?"

"Well okay," Leah corrects herself. "Writers have imagination, but most normal grownups don't really have it."

Admittedly, I am shocked to learn this child's perception of adults. I question if imagination is purely reserved for children to enjoy. I type in the question.

"Imagination is important," says 18-year-old Henry Mariscal who spent his summer working in a summer school in New York City. "It's crucial sometimes to keep in touch with your childhood."

When thinking back on my own childhood, I realize I spent more time imagining myself a mermaid, a fairy, a medieval princess, or a young sorceress than I ever do as a young adult. Does this become progressively worse for, as Leah puts it, "normal" adults?

Leah looks at me intently and puts a small, comforting hand on my lap.

"Does this make you sad? Does it make you miss being little?" she asks with sympathetic eyes.

Now it is my turn to struggle for the right words. "A little," I reply. "When you get older your imagination is hindered by a very negative human attitude called cynicism."

"Is that sad or angry?" Leah asks, eager to learn the meaning behind a new word.

"No," I say slowly, "I wish it were that simple. It's kind of hard to explain, but it is often called a 'loss of innocence'."

Leah struggles to find a suitable reply and begins to hum to herself.

"I think if grownups would try to remember what it was like when they were kids with their hearts they would be happier," she says at last, with a small smile. "They need to remember that things were simple and to remember they really were once this small."

It has not occurred to me that people could remember with their hearts. Yet the more I think about my sister's words, the more they begin to make sense. Remembering a feeling is, after all, remembering with your heart.

"Kids are far more aware than most of us realize," says Justin Rivers. "Overall adults do not explain themselves, nor do they trust children with any sort of intelligence."

Interestingly enough, children's television constantly promotes the idea of grownups as the opposition. "Kids Next Door," a cartoon featured on Cartoon Network, follows a secret organization of children who defend the kids of the world from evil grownups everywhere. Not once is a grownup publicized as anything less than horrific. "The Powerpuff Girls," a cartoon also shown on Cartoon Network, often depicts adults as idiotic and incapable, while 3 small kindergarteners are made to carry the responsibility of saving their town from disaster. It is a small wonder that children perceive adults as adversaries with this kind of propaganda.

When asked if she sees adults as the enemy, Leah smiles slyly and says, "Well, yes. Just a little."

What point is there in propagating such a negative image? Do we really want our children to view us as unimaginative and boring obstacles? Why do the grownups in charge of this show insist on such a low standard for adults?

"It's 'cause adults miss being kids!" Leah declares triumphantly. "That's why Mommy and Daddy are always saying, 'Oh, I wish I was young again!' They want to be kids. But I'll tell you a secret," she gives a conspiratorial wink. "I'm never going to stop thinking like a kid! Even when I'm taller than you I'm going to still watch cartoons and play with my dolls —"

"Are you sure you won't forget?" I interrupt, itching with curiosity.

"Nope!" Leah cries with total confidence. "Being a kid is too much fun to forget!"

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

"POP PHOTOGRAPHICA" AT THE PARRISH

Despite a detailed and well-written press release, it was still difficult to determine the subject matter of the Parrish Museum's latest exhibit, at least for yours truly. It was a case of false perceptions, probably concerning what the critic wanted the content to be rather than what it actually was.

Which is a longwinded way of saying the show was a complete surprise even though photography is this critic's favorite medium to explore. This exhibit redefines the "art" of photography by exploring its place in personal identity and its connection to crafts and popular culture.

By so doing, the presentation allows us to see photography serving diverse purposes, some of which have little to do with "aesthetics." The personal, one-of-a-kind items celebrating family traditions or relationships (like the 1890s suitcase with father/daughter photographs) are real gems. So is the vase with the picture of newlyweds.

Similarly, craft-based objects, including Ansel Adams' Yosemite Valley landscape on a lampshade, are special. So are the pillow covers, paperweights and walking sticks, all functional items detailed with portraits.

Even so, there's a small problem with the exhib-it's limitations in the area of its cultural functions. Obviously, more examples of photographs promoting cultural icons (like the Beatles puzzle on display) could have been shown.

We could continue with other examples, citing the lack of photographs on record album covers (which New York's Exit Art Gallery so ably presented). And we can't help but mention photographs' employment of presidential campaign scarves, buttons and even dresses through the decades. However, the exhibit's 1960s shirts adorned with photos of popular musicians served a similar function.

We realize that very few exhibits like this one can be so comprehensive. The curators must make choices; however, yours truly would have preferred to expand the pop culture area nonetheless, because that is where the notion of Postmodernism seems most appropriate. Simply put, we would have liked the years of inclusion to have covered more current times.

We are not challenging the Parrish's decisions, however, since the exhibit was organized/curated by the Art Gallery of Ontario, Toronto. It's a worthwhile show to be sure. The real point is simply that any issues the exhibit raises concern this critic's personal preferences.

"graphica" will be on view at Southampton's Parrish Museum until Nov. 14.

Honoring the Artist: Barbara Ernst Prey

Just back from a trip to Nova Scotia where she was looking for painting ideas, cover artist Barbara Ernst Prey was still going strong after lots of multitasking. Caught between cooking dinner and tending to her family, Ms. Prey demonstrated her characteristic energy and cheerful, optimistic demeanor for this conversation, traits that are not only special but also account for her art's universal appeal. This observation becomes apparent in the following interview.

Q. What ideas did you get from your Nova Scotia trip?

A. I'm going to do watercolors which feature lobster fishing. Maybe the idea also came from the fact that our house in Maine is next to the lobster wharf. (Ms. Prey lives in Oyster Bay, Long Island, most of the year.)

Q. How else do you get your ideas?

the East End, and there are no tourists. (She laughs and kiddingly urges yours truly not to tell anyone that).

Q. But you don't get your ideas from other pointers do

A. I look for them in the fall because it's quiet, especially on

Q. But you don't get your ideas from other painters, do you? Your art is not derivative.

A. Right. Although I admire Homer and Hopper, for example, my art is very personal to me.

Q. That's what people relate to, and not just Americans. Tell me about your work that hangs abroad.

A. I currently have two pieces in the American Embassy in Oslo and another in Minsk. One just came back from Prague.

Q. You went to Oslo yourself.

A. Yes, to give a lecture at the Embassy at the invitation of the Ambassador. It was about business supporting the arts.

Q. I know you give a lot of lectures elsewhere.

A. Yes, I did one most recently at Williams College. Lectures appeal to my academic side.

Q. You spend most of your time as an artist, however. It seems as if you've had a particularly rewarding year considering the special commissions you have undertaken. They were celebratory and historical at the same time.

A. It has been an unexpected year. Last Christmas, I did the Christmas card for the White House, the first woman to have done so. Working with Mrs. Bush, I recreated the Diplomatic Reception Room. Of course, I had to add holiday decorations and a fire in the fireplace. NASA also asked me to do a commemorative work featuring the Columbia Space Shuttle. Prints were made and given to the families of the astronauts who had died.

Q. From your description of the shuttle's liftoff, it seems you brought a sense of hope to what was a tragedy. And certainly, the White House card was optimistic, too. From what I know about you, your art really does reflect your worldview.

A. Like I said, my art is personal.

Healing Through Art Therapy

What is more therapeutic than sinking your hands into a soft pile of wet clay? We all remember that scene in Ghost when Demi is sitting at her potter's wheel and Mr. Swayze saunters up behind her, takes a seat with one leg on either side of her, and feels his way into her art. It is one of the most sensual scenes in movie history, set to the immortalized song "Unchained Melody." Throughout the course of the movie, after Patrick Swayze's character is killed, Demi's only source of comfort seems to come from the potter's wheel.

There's something that awakens the senses from the hands-on nature of creating art, and it seems to activate emotional awareness. Art therapy is a growing field that treats people dealing with psychological and emotional conflicts. Sculpture is therapy in and of itself. In recent years, pottery has been used to jog the memories of Alzheimer's patients when more traditional methods of recollection fail. The alternate sense of touch sometimes awakens lost memories. (Think Demi at the wheel with her eyes closed, talking to a recently departed Patrick.)

Art therapy is a health service profession that endorses the idea that the process of making art is inherently therapeutic. You don't necessarily need to verbalize the issues that are troubling you. Sometimes, verbalizing problems can be too difficult.

In that case, you may just need the opportunity to express the things that are weighing on your mind in another way. Art is a liberating form of expression. One reason that art therapy is effective is that it allows you to focus on a single activity, shutting out intrusive thoughts. This is a form of meditation that allows you to clear your mind and deal with one issue at a time. Art therapy also encourages risk-taking and freedom of expression in a safe, non-judgmental envi-

While art has always been a mode of expression and, therefore, therapy, for those who choose to explore it, the field of art therapy emerged in the 1930s. Psychiatrists began studying links between mental illness and the art that patients created, because it was another way to probe into their psyches. Teachers were also discovering at that time that the free, expressive creations of children were deeply influenced by their internal feel-

Children who are enduring hardship are often excellent candidates for art therapy. It's a fun environment where the child can sit with a project, and the therapist can probe as deep as he/she thinks will be effective. I used to go to an art therapist to cope with a series of surgeries I had to undergo as a child. My therapist, Mrs. Safran, used to sit with me and watch as I built sandcastles or painted, and she would ask me what I was thinking about. I never felt on the spot or inhibited with her. I just spoke freely while delving into the creative process. The thing that scared me the most in my surgeries was a mask I had to breathe into before being operated on. Now, of course, I realize that this anesthesia was essential to the operation. But then, I remember thinking it was literally filled with needles. Mrs. Safran and I made a mask out of paper mache and practiced placing it over my face in the office. When I returned to the real operating table, the mask had already been addressed. Through our own creation, we conquered

Art therapy is certainly not only for children. In art therapy, art is used as a tool for communication, self-examination, and healing. Art therapy can be beneficial to individuals, couples, or groups. Art therapists work in psychiatric hospitals, geriatric wards, children's wards, counseling centers, and rehabilitation centers. It doesn't matter if the patient is "good" at art. It is the act of the creation, the focus, and the creativity that makes the process therapeutic. While the end result can be enlightening, the journey to that end is often the most enlightening part. However, if you are painting blind rage and it manifests itself as a certain image, the end result may reveal something about yourself you did-

Art therapists are trained in both art and therapy and hold Master's Degrees. There is an American Art Therapy Association that creates the standards and necessary qualifications for professionals in this

In The Hamptons

History's big feet leave huge footsteps in the drifting sounds of time. What is an old imprint can be reshaped into a new form with a stomping, heavy impression of its own. The Star War sci-fis and Indiana Jones adventures were patterned after 1930s serials that played weekly at the movies.

Each episode left us faux-anguished at the conclusion, thinking Buck Rogers or Frank Buck were goners - only to find the following week that, inexplicably, they were doin' just fine. It wasn't just the action that drew the naïve audience - it was the imaginative rush of fantasy with new, strange and exotic visual sensory material updating silent films of futurism. Trodding the age-old path, Star Wars and Indiana Jones impressions are being covered with dust but, fortunately, like Buck Rogers' miraculous survival at the close of the previous chapter, the genre lives again - and better! Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow is very new and fresh as a daisy and it does it with good old retro nostalgia.

Sky Captain has been crafted with singular extravagant care by writer/director Kerry Conran. who is able to put these fictional characters above and beyond, as well as intricately enmeshed, in its quite beautiful computerized imagery. The director's brother, Kevin Conran, is the production designer. The term "production" now has a new meaning since no sets are constructed. Everything is drawn up in the computer graphic space of pixilation and its grand stars, Jude Law, Gwyneth Paltrow and Angelina Jolie, perform in true comic book style against a flat (green screen) background as later to be mixed in with the location and form. Their performances are, in turn, ingratiatingly charming and stirring. Jude Law is the Sky Captain, Joe Sullivan, a daredevil pilot who operates a freelance squadron from a private base near Manhattan. And oh, what a Manhattan it is - a futurama melding of art deco, 1930s "streamlining" (with a tip-o-the-hat to New York's 1939 World's Fair) and, sleek, atmospheric swift styling that swims in sepia. Opening the film, a gigantic zeppelin, Hindenberg III, moors at the top of the Empire State Building. The Chronicle, the crusading newspaper, buzzes there and Paltrow's Polly Perkins adds to the buzz - she's a gutsy-perky reporter with enough confidence to tell Lois Lane to take a flying leap with you-know-who.

She and her tough boss, Michael Zambon, add to the shimmering, polished aluminum steelyness of the city - a Metropolis soon to be beset by mammoth robots. Holy Moly!

The comic book (could this be the end of the world?) plot begins to boil like a pot of pulp mash when scientists go missing. Polly, hot on the story, dashes to the Radio City Music Hall to interview a scientist who knows all and is afraid he is next after he sees The Wizard of Oz.

Gee, whiz, a lovely touch. Wail! Go air raid sirens in pre-World War II New York. Before you know it, robots taller than the highest skyscrapers are knocking them down, right and left. Holy Moses! More fictitious weapons of mass destruction! Maybe Mayor LaGuardia will be able to invade the trouble-making Hamptons. Gasp! This calls for action. Polly contacts her ex-boyfriend, the Sky Captain, who swings into action in his P-40 Warhawk, gallantly frightening marching and flying robots. Zing! Pow! Battles include bickering skirmishes between the reinvented lovebirds and the classic villian, now titled Totenkopf. His secret lair is an ice cave far, far away. Polly and Joe have a grand tour of Asia and an atmospheric airport where a British commander, eye patch and all, is spectacularly splendid. She's called "Franky" and Angelina Jolie fills the role amply. It is all in classic comic book style. Joe's sidekick, Giovanni Ribisi, chews up the scenery and wads of bubble gum. They all stretch the action movie to the limit and it's great. Pass me the Bazooka bubble gum and save the cartoon wrapper. Pop!

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

John Drew Theatre at guild Hall East Hampton

Entertainment In The Hamptons

review: red herring

Suspense, deceit, mystery and a whole lot of laughs best sum up the latest play at the John Drew Theater at Guild Hall in East Hampton. Red Herring is a madcap comedy by Michael Hollinger, directed by Michael Nathanson and produced by Jonathan Peters' Spindletop Productions. The story takes place during the 1950s at the time of Senator Joe McCarthy's reign over those infamous anti-Communist interrogations.

With 6 actors playing 18 different characters, the performers have their work cut out for them. The actors and crew rehearsed for five weeks prior to opening night, practicing every detail from voice pitch to comedic timing. As with any form of comedy, timing and delivery are crucial. Every character in the show flawlessly keeps the momentum of the story, which added power to each and every performance. In the first scene we're introduced to female detective Maggie Pelletier, played by Tina

Jones, and her partner and boyfriend Frank Keller, played by David Bartlett (who also plays a priest and Major Hartwell). Jones and Keller are reminiscent of a Spencer Tracy/Katharine Hepburn team. The love story between the two has the audience hoping for a happy ending. We watch as they unfold a murder case that begins to unravel while meshing a cast of other interesting and peculiar people.

The second duo is Ali Squitieri (who portrays Lynn McCarthy – daughter of Sen. Joe McCarthy) and her boyfriend James, played by William Cullinan. They become entangled in quite a mess of their own. Lynn portrays a young, but very sexually minded Catholic girl, while her boyfriend James plays a youthful Jewish Russian Spy. These two young lovebirds are certainly a match made in heaven of another kind. One of the more memorable scenes was when James asked Lynn for his hand in marriage. It was at that moment that he also makes the decision to tell the truth about his profession "A Russian Spy." It makes for many close calls and is definitely filled with humorous sentiment.

Next we meet Mrs. Kravitz, played by Helen Mendes (who also portrays Mrs. McCarthy and Mrs. Van Norstrand), a housewife who is having an affair with a much younger Russian fisherman, who also just happens to be a prime suspect in the murder case. Mendes has such a talent for her strong comedic delivery with every line and has the resume to back her. What can we say about Marshall Correro who plays Andrei Borchevsky, Mrs. Kravitz's lover, except funny, funny, funny! Marshall also portrays the character Petey, Dr. Kasden, Herbert and last but not least the mysterious corpse. It was the character of Andrei, though, that was his standout role, perhaps due to the use of his talent for physical comedy.

Music is always an imperative part of any show, and the selections help set the tone and create a very nostalgic vibe. The sounds of Elvis, Louis Armstrong and even the theme of I Love Lucy magically evoke a feeling of comfort and happy times.

The set design consists of modular block-like pieces of a puzzle, custom-made to perfectly transform with each scene. There are more than twenty set changes in all, and each moves into the next with smooth precision. Since the story line takes place in several locations, including Boston, Wisconsin and the South Pacific, the changes have to be quick, but very distinctive. By using subtle touches and décor accents, the stage was altered. Director Michael Nathanson told me set designer, Brian Leaver wanted to create a set that would resemble and work like a Swiss Army knife. And that is exactly what he magnificently accomplished.

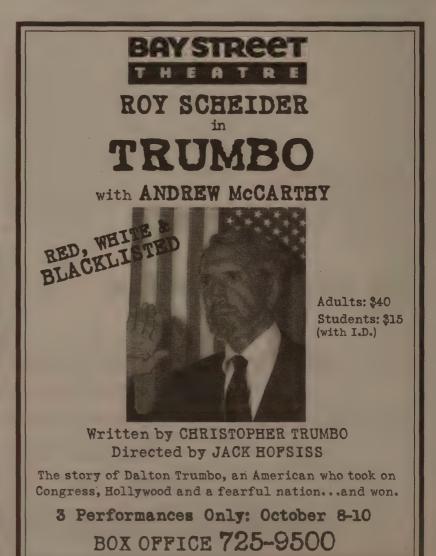

Red Herring is playing through October 10th at the John Drew Theater at Guild Hall. Dan's Papers is a sponsor and proceeds from this fine production are benefitting several good causes. On October 1st proceeds will benefit Mayer & Company CPA's March to Fight Breast Cancer, Southampton Hospital is the beneficiary on October 2nd, and The Retreat and East End Hospice will benefit from the October 9th performance. The goal of this collaboration is to provide audiences with an evening filled with laughter to give a little reprieve to East Enders from their every day.

-Kelly Krieger

For more information call 1-866-811-4111 or log onto www.theatermania.com. Tickets are $20 and there are dinner packages with the Farmhouse Restaurant available for $45. Performances are Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m.

preview: trumbo

One of the darkest hours in American history was during the House Un-American Activities Committee hearings of the 1940s. Led by the reactionary Senator Joe McCarthy, the hearings put members of the Hollywood film community on trial in an attempt to intimidate them to admit they were Communist sympathizers or testify against others. The political witch-hunt forced many with few or no ties to the Communist party to stop working. For many, the aftermath of the trials was marked by years of bitterness, betrayal, suicides, destroyed careers and a gradual re-acceptance, first anonymously, then officially, into the Hollywood film community. There were those who were able to rise above the petty political and career jockeying of the time. They refused to back down and ultimately survived the whole period. One such person was Dalton Trumbo.

Trumbo was a playwright who had a long career as a successful screenwriter that included penning the classic film Spartacus, directed by Stanley Kubrick. In 1947, Trumbo, together with others, stood up to the Committee and became one of the infamous Hollywood Ten. Like many from that time, he was forced to keep his life together under the spoken and unspoken blacklist that forbade anyone who bucked the Committee, or who were found to be Communist sympathizers, from working. Shedding light on the times, parts of Trumbo's letters from that era to his family, friends and others now make up a staged reading called Trumbo. The letters reveal the man and his agonizing journey to keep his family intact and his career afloat, as well as to maintain his work as a free artist in a society taken over by zealous, fear-mongering politicians.

Initiated by Trumbo's son Christopher, the unique theatrical performance, which also includes film clips of the hearings, first played in September of 2003 in Manhattan. It has subsequently starred Alec Baldwin, Nathan Lane, Gore Vidal and Roy Scheider. Scheider is now reprising his lead role with three performances at the Bay Street Theatre in Sag Harbor on October 8, 9, and 10.

Scheider will play Trumbo, while likeable Hollywood actor Andrew McCarthy will play the role of Christopher. It was Scheider's idea to bring the staged reading to Bay Street. Scheider is relishing his role as Trumbo, but the part has clearly been a

BENEFITS AND SPECIAL EVENTS

The seventh annual "Lobster Bash" to celebrate Kevin McAllister's watch over the Peconic Bays system is a benefit for the baykeeper program. It will be held at the Lobster Inn, Southampton, from 6 to 10 p.m. on Friday. A $95 donation brings celebrants a full bar, hors d'oeuvres, lobster dinner and music. For tickets, call 631-727-7346.

The Bridgehampton Historical Society holds its 12th Vintage Sports Car Road Rallye all day Saturday. Sports cars dating from 1959 or earlier compete over a set course along Bridgehampton back roads starting at 10 a.m. from the Society's head-quarters on Main St. (across from the Candy Kitchen). Cars built between 1960-69 will tour over the same course starting at 11 a.m. All cars are expected back by 5 p.m. for a party and awards ceremony. For more information, call 631-537-1088.

Southampton's Parrish Art Museum has a "Circus Day Extravaganza" on Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m. with the National Circus Project. There will be a center ring mini-circus from 1 to 2 p.m. and then performers will lead hands-on circus workshops for children from 2 to 4 p.m. There is no admission charge but advance registration is requested; call 631-283-2118.

challenge. "He's not the world's easiest guy to portray. He's a very complex personality and he writes in sentences longer than Samuel Johnson."

Scheider is perfect for the part. The veteran actor has the kind of range to successfully attack such a multi-dimensional role. He has appeared on stage, including as part of similar staged readings in

Roy Scheider in Trumbo

Southampton and East Hampton, and has starred in such Hollywood blockbuster films as Jaws and The French Connection. More recently, he has appeared in a number of small independent films, which have given him the opportunity to spotlight his highly refined acting chops. He can play a tough-guy cop (as he did in both The French Connection and the lesser-known, minor classic Seven Ups) or a flamboyant character such as Bob Fosse (as he did in All That Jazz).

Scheider also brings his commitment as an artist who seeks the truth and who relates to Trumbo. "This is a man who would not be bullied into anything else but the truth," he stated about Trumbo. "He wouldn't do it no matter what the circumstances were," he concluded. Scheider was able to draw from his own personal friendships in understanding how a person could survive the witch-hunts. A friend of his who couldn't work for years because of the trials was Walter Bernstein. Bernstein was eventually able to use his experience and knowledge of those times to write the serio-comic film The Front, which starred Woody Allen.

The timing of Trumbo is not accidental. Given the precarious nature of the times we have lived in since the war on terrorism began with the events of September 11, 2001, freedom of speech has been undermined. Reflecting on the play, which Scheider calls "very timely" and which can be seen as a metaphor for the debate over supporting the war in Iraq or speaking out against it, Scheider holds nothing back in assessing the Bush administration's stance on dissent. "They have sold the American people a bill of goods labeled 'fear'," he stated.

With all the recent success of staged readings and with interest in the period so high due to the obvious parallels with current times, Scheider, who has lived year-round on the East End for ten years, appears interested in doing more performances of Trumbo. He will also be acting in other films and participating in developing screenplays on the artists of the Renaissance. Although he has directed plays in the past, there will be no film directing for him. "I have no interest," the straight-shooting actor said. "It's life-consuming."

If any food is synonymous with autumn, it has to be the apple. U-pick apples signs are up at apple orchards on both the North and South forks and participants are joyously joining the fun.

There is a continually changing supply of apple varieties as they come into season and are generally divided-into two categories, eating apples and cooking apples. The key to experiencing apples to the fullest is becoming familiar with the variety to suit your favorite way of eating - out of hand, raw in a salad, baked into a savory or sweet preparation or cooked into a sauce. Orchards, such as the Milk Pail in Water Mill, will supply you with a list of their ever-changing supply on request.

For an elegant, mouth-watering, first course salad, arrange endive spears, crisp slices of fennel, tingling sweet apple slices and crunchy walnuts dressed with a blue cheese vinaigrette. Jacques Pepin's apple bonne femme, apples baked with apricot jam and maple syrup, couldn't be simpler or timelier. And apple salsa, a preparation to serve with a roast or a stew, is chock full of sweet red onion, plumped currants and a bit of jalapeño.

Refrigerate apples to keep them from becoming soft. Head to your local apple orchard, choose this healthy food well (apples contain vitamin B and C) and enjoy eating them often.

APPLE SALSA

Prepare the salsa up to one day ahead for flavors to mellow then serve with a roast of your choice. Yield: 2 1/2 cups

2 Granny Smiths, Gala or Pippin apples 1/2 cup chopped red onion 1 small jalapeño, trimmed and seeded

1/3 cup dried currants 1/2 cup fresh orange juice Grated jest of 1 orange 1 teaspoon ground cumin 1 tablespoon chopped cilantro

1. Rinse and pat apples dry. Core apples and cut into 1/4-inch dice. Peel and cut onion into 1/4-inch dice. Mince jalapeño and combine in a bowl with apples and onion.

2. Place currants in a small bowl with orange juice to plump them, about 15-20 minutes. Add to the apple mixture with remaining ingredients and stir to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Prepare up to one or two days ahead. Refrigerate, covered in a suitable container until ready to

Freshly ground pepper to taste 1/2 cup plain low-fat yogurt 1/4 cup fresh cold water 1/2 cup extra-virgin olive oil

1. Toast walnut halves in preheated 375-degree oven for 6-7 minutes until lightly browned and crisp.

2. Peel, core and halve apples, then slice into thin wedges. Put into a bowl and toss carefully with lemon juice. Cut fennel lengthwise into thin slices; remove the core and separate slices into sticks. Soak in a bowl of ice water to cover, then drain and pat dry. Toss gently with apples and set aside. Separate endive spears, wash and spin-dry, then wrap in paper towels to absorb excess moisture.

3. Prepare dressing: Crumble cheese into a blender or work bowl of food processor fitted with steel knife. Add the remaining ingredients except oil. Blend or process to mix, scraping down sides as necessary. Gradually pour oil through opening in blender cover or through feed tube of processor and blend to mix thoroughly. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Scrape mixture into a bowl or small pitcher. Refrigerate in a suitable container if doing ahead.

4. Assemble salad: Fan 4 or 5 endive spears on a salad plate. Divide apple/fennel mixture equally in a mound at the core end of the spears. Drizzle over dressing and sprinkle with toasted walnuts.

To Prepare Ahead: Prepare dressing up to two days ahead. Refrigerate, covered in a suitable container. Toast walnuts and prepare apples, fennel and endive up to several hours ahead.

JACQUE PEPIN'S APPLE BONNE FEMME

Select apples that keep their shape while cooking, such as Golden Delicious, Granny Smith or Honeycrisp.

Serves 6

6 medium apples, about 2 pounds
1/3 cup apricot jam
1/2 cup light maple syrup

3 tablespoon unsalted butter, cut into 6 pieces Pound cake and sour cream for serving, optional

1. With corer, plunge straight down into the apple so it doesn't veer off center. If it does, clean around the core with a paring knife to have clean, rounded openings at each end.

2. With the point of a paring knife, cut a 4-inch incision through the skin all around the apples, about a third of the way down from the stem end. When the apples cook, the flesh expands and the apples will lift up like a lid above this cut. Without scoring, the apples would burst.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees

3. Arrange the apples in a gratin dish or other attractive ovenproof baking dish. Coat the apples with the apricot jam and maple syrup, and dot each one with pieces of butter. Bake for 30 minutes, baste with pan juices and cook for another 25-30 minutes until plump, brown and soft to the touch. Serve over a slice of pound cake and a dab of cold sour cream, if desired.

Dining in the Hamptons

After pulling off Montauk Highway and heading down a bumpy road, past a marina where sailboats bob contentedly, you will stumble upon a jewel resting on the banks of the Shinnecock Canal. Indian Cove has the feel of a cozy ski lodge with its peaked wooden ceilings, and yet it is situated in the summery setting of a blue harbor. The deck where my friend Derek and I sat looked upon the muted sunset, and as I sipped a glass of Pinot Grigio and nibbled on the warm rolls, I was entranced by the vision of the moon rising beneath the blanket of an inky sky.

Danny, the manager, asked if we wanted to take a tour, so I abandoned my glass of wine to head downstairs. We walked through the bar room, open and oaky, and headed down the wide stairs into the main dining room. Even on the warm September night, the ambiance inspired the desire to be curled up around a fire, sipping hot chocolate. Part of the deep red carpeting is removed to create a dance floor for weddings or private events, of which Indian Cove hosts many.

We walked past the framed Zagat rating of "Excellent" and a few Dan's Papers "Best of the Best" awards and descended down another flight of stairs to the kitchen, where Ek Raj, the cook, greeted us over a steaming stove. Ek Raj is originally from Nepal, but his family settled in Colorado and opened several Himalayan restaurants. I have dined on his cuisine before, when he was a chef in Boulder, CO. I was almost knocked off my feet to see him again, and my mouth watered in anticipation of his skilled cooking hands. We passed through the kitchen, and Danny showed us the special lobster tanks. The salt water that the lobsters live in comes directly from a well 60 feet in the ground. Danny explained that they always try to keep the menu as local as possible. For example, the fish of the day (which I would later enjoy) was striped bass because they had been running through the canal that day. The vegetables right now are of the local bounty.

My stomach was growling by the time we returned to our peaceful moonlit perch, and Danny rushed off to get some appetizers. Before we knew it, he was back with calamari fried in buttermilk, which Danny said "lightens the texture." It was indeed light and crispy, drizzled with lemon and dipped in the chunky tomato sauce. Next was a tuna and shrimp spring roll wrapped in a lightly fried shell, served with a teriyaki reduction and a textured seaweed salad. The puddle of teriyaki, with wasabi drizzled into the shape of a flower in the middle, added a zing to the fresh taste of the seafood. Before we could even comment on the satisfying mingling of flavors, the clams casino emerged from the kitchen, the pretty shells presenting clams with bacon, garlic and breading. In his other hand, Danny carried a delicious fried goat cheese with pistachio, walnut and pecan crusting. I bit into a melting piece of cheese, and it was crispy on the outside and delightfully creamy on the inside.

The appetizers were cleared and the wine refilled as we listened to the rippling of the canal below our billowing umbrella. And then came the entrees.

The plate set before me flirted with my watering taste buds: fresh caught striped bass (I told you!) served over wilted spinach, roasted red peppers, and mushrooms. I took a bite and the fish flaked in my mouth, releasing the tantalizing juices of the light mushrooms with butter. Derek's eyes widened at the dish that lay before him: Indian Cove's signature risotto with shrimp, scallops, and lobster. The creamy dish was so packed with fresh seafood that you couldn't take a bite without catching some lobster tail on your tongue.

We were so stuffed and contented that we couldn't even be enticed into dessert by the homemade bread pudding, served hot with vanilla ice cream, or the stuffed crepes with vanilla ice cream and hot chocolate sauce. We ordered two espressos and tried to gain the momentum to leave this perfect porch overlooking the sleeping harbor. After a heartfelt thank you, we tore ourselves from the peace and serenity of Indian Cove.

Indian Cove is a seafood-oriented restaurant with the influence of the two French owners, Renée and Bernard. They have owned the restaurant and marina for 7 years. Previously, Renée owned the Carlisle Hotel in Manhattan and Bernard owned Le Chef in Southampton. Indian Cove offers a 3-course prix fixe for $23.75 with a large selection. They cater to a local, loyal clientele, and are happy to host beautiful and spacious weddings, events, and holiday parties.

HEALTH, BEAUTY & FITNESS Squash In The Hamptons

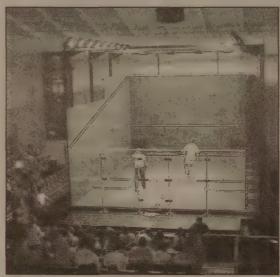

Squash, while not granted the high-profile exposure of other sports such as tennis or volleyball, is one of the most beloved sports in the world. It was invented in the early 19th century in a most unlikely place: the Fleet Prison in London. The prison detained mostly debtors, and they exercised by hitting a ball with a racquet against the walls. The game of "rackets" was borne, and it eventually leaked out of prison and into, ironically, some of the top English private schools.

In the Harrow School in 1820, Squash assumed its name because the students played with a punctured Rackets ball that "squashed" upon impact with the wall. The softness of the balls inspired a new variety of shots and required more exertion from the players because the direction of each serve was less predictable. In 1864, the first four Squash courts were constructed at the school, and Squash became an official sport.

North American Squash differs from European Squash in several key aspects. The ball is harder in North American Squash, and the court is slightly smaller. In Europe, regulatory size of a Squash court is 21 feet wide and 32 feet long, and in North America, the court is 18 1/2 feet wide and 32 feet long.

According to the point system in Squash, the server is the only one who can gain points. When the receiver wins a round, he/she gains possession of the serve. A match in Squash is the best of five games, and according to World Single Squash Rules, each game is to nine points.

Squash spread rapidly from North America and England, mostly to locations where British forces were stationed. Thus, South Africa, India, Pakistan, Egypt, Australia, and New Zealand learned Squash early in its existence. Australia is probably the most successful Squash nation in the world, and it came to them through contact with the British military. The first Squash courts in Australia were established in 1913.

All glass court will be in Southampton for exhibition

Squash is popular among men and women alike. The most famous woman Squash player is probably Heather McKay of Australia, who dominated the game from 1966 to 1977, remaining undefeated for her entire career.

Pakistan has an interesting relationship with the game of Squash, having fewer than 400 courts in the whole country and still consistently producing some of the most successful Squash competitors in the world. Jahangir Khan is a member of the Khan dynasty of Squash, having dominated the sport for 14 years, winning the British Open ten times and the World open eight times. Jahangir is now Vice President of the World Squash Federation.

Squash is now played in 130 countries on over 47,000 courts, and the World Squash Federation has its sights set on having Squash included as a sport in the 2008 Olympics.

This week, the Southampton Town Recreation Center will be hosting a Squash Exhibition called "Squash in the Hamptons." An all-glass portable tournament court will be transported to the Rec Center for the weekend. On Friday, October 8, from 6:30-10 p.m., there will be exhibitions, matches, and pairings of professional players for the public to watch. All day Saturday, October 9, the courts will be open to public participation and matches, as well as instruction and an opportunity to meet some of the best Squash players in the world. There will be coaching for kids, along with prizes and giveaways.

Notable figures from all over the world have confirmed participation in the exhibition. Chris Gordon, age 18, is ranked #6 in US Pro rankings. Dan Sharplin, age 32, was the New Zealand Champion in 2002. Many more superior athletes, both men and women, will participate.

"Squash in the Hamptons" was created in January of 2004 to encourage the growth of participation in Squash on the East End. Eventually, the Rec Center plans to have a five-court facility. The mission is to make Squash accessible to all residents of our community. As of now, there are no publicly accessible Squash courts on the entire South Fork of Long Island.

Squash was recently named #1 of the "Top Ten Healthiest Sports" by Forbes Magazine. It is also competitive, skillful, and extremely fun, and the addition of these Squash courts will be an asset to our community. The event "Squash in the Hamptons" aims to raise consciousness about Squash, and to get people excited about the coming first class Squash facility in Southampton. Wally Glennan, chairman of "Squash in the Hamptons," encourages people to come out and see that Squash is an "Athletic, attractive, and, frankly, addictive game."

-Emily J Weitz

"Squash in the Hamptons" will take place at the Southampton Town Recreation Center on Majors Path in Southampton on October 8 & 9. For more information, contact Wally Glennon at wally@squashinthehamptons.com or call Southampton Youth Services at 287-1511.

Illuminations by Barbara Jo Howard

Treat Yourself Well

October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month (NBCAM.org). It is estimated that over 215,000 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer this year. Statistics estimate that in 2004, 2,820 New York women will lose their lives to this disease. If there is any good news, it is simply that early detection and treatment can greatly increase the chances of winning the battle.

Mammograms are still the best tool for early detection. It is recommended that women 40 years and older should get a mammogram every year or two. NBCAM states that the top four reasons women don't get screened are: "My doctor didn't tell me; I never thought about it; I don't have any problems so I don't need it; and I don't have enough time." Not surprisingly, most of the other reasons focus on fear (fear of diagnosis, fear of pain, fear of cost) as well as no routine medical care.

Knowledge is critical. My aunt died of breast cancer. She also died of fear. When she first found the lump on her breast, she was afraid to have it diagnosed, afraid that it would be positive. So, she decided to ignore it with the hope it would go away. It didn't; she did.

No one can say that my aunt would be alive today had she faced her fear and tackled the issue immediately. But, at the end of her life, she admonished herself, over and over, for not having faced the truth sooner.

To confront such fears with knowledge, there are plenty of sites available with information that you can access in the privacy of your own home, such as breastcancer.org, komen.org, and yme.org, among others. To help alleviate the cost of a mammogram, in 1993 President Clinton proclaimed the third Friday in October as National Mammography Day, and many radiologists have since provided discounted or free screenings. This year the date is October 15, so check local listings for participants.

Unfortunately, the risk of breast cancer increases as we get older. Eighty percent of breast cancer is detected in women over fifty, with occurrence highest among women over sixty. Sadly, it is these women who are most likely not to get a mammogram even though Medicare will cover it.

What causes breast cancer? No one knows for certain, though it might be genetic. Estrogen has been linked to breast cancer, not as a cause, but as a probable stimulant of cancer cells. Research says those at risk include women who got their period before they were 12 years old; women who had their first child after they were 25; women who never gave birth, women who went through menopause after 55, and women who are using hormone replacement therapy. Heck, if you have breasts, you are at risk. Though higher risk is attributed to those with a family history.

So what can you do? Besides monthly self-examinations and regular screenings, a healthy lifestyle might help prevent breast cancer (as well as two other killers: heart disease and obesity).

You have read it all before, but here it is again: do not smoke, decrease dietary fats, increase fiber, eat fresh fruit and lots of vegetables, don't drink a lot of alcohol, and get exercise. Basically, be responsible for your health. Often women take very good care of the other people in their lives, but are not good at self-care.

This month, be proactive and ask the women in your life if they have had an annual mammogram. As women mature, they are less likely to get screened, so be sure and follow up with your mother, aunt and grandmother about whether or not they have had a mammogram. Offer to take them, if necessary. Because, time is the best factor in fighting this disease. So make time for yourself and get screened. Quite honestly, by getting a mammogram we have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

HEALTH, BEAUTY & FITNESS

I'm Going To Live Forever - Yay.

The search for eternal life has long been an obsession for mankind. Our mortality is life's only guarantee, and it's no surprise that scientists, authors, religious figures, writers and philosophers spend their time on earth pondering it all. Ponce de Leon discovered Florida in 1513 while in search of the legendary fountain of youth. The promise of infinite life and health could get any explorer to Florida, even during an extra hot and crowded tourist season or, for Ponce, when it was nothing more than a sweaty swamp infested with bugs and alligators, with cypress looming overhead. Needless to say, Mr. De Leon didn't find the mythical spring. Instead, he discovered what would be a theme park, a corrupt electoral, a fishing hole, a home for Hemingway, and a hurricane magnet. Such is life. But what if this life of hot dogs and blue skies and long drives could go on forever? What if it could go on as long as you'd really ever want it to? The psychics say that we don't die exactly, but move on to that alternate dimension where we stop being the superficial jerks we are and gain a higher understanding. Welcome to the afterlife. It's not living forever.

A current article by John Hodgman in Men's Journal explores the people of Sardinia, many of whom are known to live past one hundred years old. He mentions the food, the exercise, the way of life. The little island off of Italy is inhabited by a bunch of depressed people that eat simple foods and drink wine and might not all inhale their cigarettes - but a lot of them smoke. What keeps them alive is a low carb diet - not Atkins; regular daily work - not working out; and the funniest part - the depression. Oh, and the wine! Let's never forget the wine. We have yet another excuse to drink without fault and to toast as they greet one another in Sardinia, "To 100 years." And what of this depression? It seems that the fatalist nature of the little men in hats is a major key to crossing the century line. These people spend their lives dutifully working without dreaming of a better car, a new set of breasts, or making it in Hollywood. Their lack of optimism - in other words, the acceptance of things as they are keeps stress low. You won't get high blood pressure and ulcers when you don't look beyond what you already have. A bad attitude improves becomes clear.

This is where we can all excel. Avoiding bread isn't easy, but being depressed, working and drinking wine shouldn't be a problem for anyone in America. The plan is easy. First, get a job. If you already have one, make sure it's a labor job. You stockbrokers will need to trade in your suits for a shovel or a rake. Stop by the East Hampton train station or 7-Eleven in Southampton at 7 a.m. if you need an employer. Now, make sure you work a 12-hour day, 6 days a week. With little time left for family, friends or joy, and your inevitable exhaustion, you should be perfectly poised to spend the last 4 hours of your day being depressed. Take two hours to wash up, cook a healthy low carb meal, and clean the dishes. After that, uncork a bottle of red and drink the last 2 hours of your night away. Please do not think happy thoughts or plan for a better future. Go to bed drunk, then wake up and do it all over again. Make Sunday your day off so you can do chores around the house and drink more. If you're not depressed within 6 months, you may be superhuman. Consider sacrificing your long life for a career in fighting crime.

The road to becoming a centenarian is now paved. Imagine the life. Watch your friends and family die. Maybe surpass the span of your children's lives. Laugh at the silly whims of those who care about the quality of their measly 70-80 years. You have the tools. You can harness the power of near-immortality. When you reach the 100 mark, maybe celebrate by going to Disney World to pay homage to that silly dreamer Ponce de Leon. It will be stressful, but what a way to go.

INTERIORS & EXTERIORS Cooked Earth – Terra Cotta Pots

Terra cotta pots are among the most ancient of human tools. Throughout recorded history, they have been integral to cultures all over the world. From the enormous vessels that hold the contents of two bathtubs-full of water to the tiny containers that hold a single marigold, they have found their way into daily life with their myriad uses.

Terra cotta literally means "cooked earth" in Italian, and terra cotta pots are beautiful and simple, even without any ornamentation. They are, as the name indicates, cooked clay.

Though terra cotta pots have been utilized in more rustic forms for centuries, today they are molded and then fired in a kiln. They can be glazed and refired to another color or a glossy finish, or just left to the rich reddish brown hue that they naturally possess. When the pots are glazed, they don't absorb water as readily, which translates into less watering of the plants or less loss of water. All clay pots weather with time, so terra cotta pots can be expected to crack as the years pass. Leaving a terra cotta pot outside through the winter is a surefire way to shorten its life span, as the organic nature of the clay will expand and contract as the temperature changes.

Terra cotta pots are most often used as planters here in the US. They are also ideal for holding mass amounts of water. In countries such as Thailand, giant terra cotta pots are filled with water and used for bathing. In such a hot climate, it's refreshing to stand in the beams of sunshine in a reed hut pouring cool buckets of water over your body from a terra cotta pot as tall as your shoulder.

While regions all over the world have independently discovered and utilized clay to create terra cotta, to find the best, start with the name. It's not tierra cocinada, so don't search the hills of Spain; it's not gekochte Masse, so steer clear of Germany. The region of Tuscany in Italy has arguably the best soil in the world for terra cotta. The clay there has a unique chemical composition that can be dug from pits in the earth. It's a gray substance that, when fired, turns a warm pinkish-brown hue. The primary town in Italy whose soil is ideal for terra cotta may be the small town of Impruneta. There, artisans have been creating terra cotta for hundreds of years. In fact, the designer of Il Duomo in Florence demanded that his now monumental cupola be designed from clay brought from Impruneta. Since there are still so many artisans, many of whom are members of families who have been in the trade for generations, the terra cotta pots from this town are hand-crafted and beautiful.

If at all possible, I highly recommend a trip across the Atlantic to the Italian region of Tuscany, to the small town of Impruneta. But if that is out of your realm of possibility, you can still get your hands on some of the best terra cotta pots in the world, straight from Impruneta's craftspeople. Seibert & Rice is a company based in Short Hills, NJ, and it is the leading importer of terra planters and urns terra Impruneta. Seibert & Rice has been specializing in large and small terra cotta pots since their inaugural line of crafts in 1994. As the years passed, customers had a higher and higher demand for the larger pots, so Siebert & Rice discontinued the smaller pots until now. Due to requests from old customers for "those great small pots," the company decided to bring back a line of petite pots. They range in diameter from 4" to 10", and range in price from $20 to $70. These pots are marked with detail and are valued for their durability. To find out more about Seibert & Rice, log on to www.seibert-rice.com.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Evolutionary Wonder: Darwin Hybrid Tulips

As you plan your Spring garden, keep in mind one of the most beautiful and elegant of spring bulbs: the Darwin hybrid tulip. These spectacular flowers bloom in mid-to-late April when all of us are eager for color and greenery after winter's doldrums. These tulips produce some of the largest, most translucent, and beautiful flowers available. While they are weather resistant, they are, because of their long stems and large flowers, best suited to sunny areas protected from harsh winds.

Darwin hybrids were developed by the Dutch breeder, D.W. Lefeber, who crossed Tulipa fosteriana, also known as "Red Emperor" - still a popular early Spring tulip – with a variety of cultivars that were then known as Darwin tulips. The result was a tulip that produces a sturdy, long stem and a very large flower. These hybrid tulips produce a distinctive, pyramidal shape when the flower buds are immature and flowers of high quality and vivid color. The flowers have an iridescent sheen and translucence that is awesome. They have become one of the more popular cut flowers in the market.

Darwin hybrid tulips come in a variety of colors from orange and red to yellow and pink. There are tend to discard bulbs once they have bloomed, the Darwin hybrids will bloom for several years. We have had good results with a number of cultivars:

"Apeldoorn," a group of tulips under the same name in colors from red to orange, shades of yellow, and striped colors; "Golden Oxford," with large, bright yellow flowers; "Ivory Floradale," a beautiful ivory-yellow flower spotted with red; "Oxford," a vermilion red; "Ad Rem," a deep orange; "Hans Mayer," a golden-yellow with red stripes; and "Parade," a bright, translucent red.

Darwin hybrids generally grow 22-34 inches in height, so it is important to plant the bulbs at a depth that will ensure they are well-anchored. Plant the bulbs at a depth that is at least two-and-a-half times the bulbs' diameter. This equates to about six inches or so. Our experience suggests planting the bulbs even deeper to accommodate the East End's sandy soil; it will increase the longevity of the bulbs and discourages the rodents that like to eat them. An overall depth of eight or nine inches, therefore, is recommended.

Tulips make a bold display when planted in groups of a dozen bulbs or more. Using a garden spade to create a deep/wide hole or trench works better, and is much easier, than planting bulbs individually using a trowel or bulb planter. Plant groups of bulbs in circular holes no smaller than a large dinner plate, or in wide curving trenches. Cover the bulbs with a litrodents and dogs who love to dig up the bulbs in search of the bone meal). Because tulips can be planted deep, you may want to layer bulbs above the tulips. Grape hyacinths, crocus, etc. are an ideal consideration and help to fill in the garden display for a longer period.

Plant tulips from late-September through mid-November. Late September is probably the best time to start planting because the ground is still warm enough to enable the bulbs to develop strong roots before growth stops from the cold. If you plant later than the start of November, do not expect great results the following Spring, as the bulbs simply do not have enough time to establish themselves

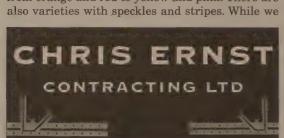

If moles, chipmunks, and gophers plague your garden, you may want to consider planting some companion bulbs to deter these pests. Consider a few Fritillaria imperialis (also called "Crown Imperial") among the bulbs. The odor produced by these bulbs is a natural deterrent. Unfortunately, no preventive measure will deter deer who love to eat tulip buds before they open. If your garden is not protected by deer fencing, consider a choice other than tulips, e.g., you are much safer sticking with daffodils and hyacinths, neither of which deer will eat.

There is a wide variety of tulip bulbs offered at nurseries and garden centers on the East End. Selection can be a daunting task. Because we like to get on with gardening once May comes along, we have found the Darwin hybrid tulips to be an excellent choice for "bringing on Spring," but not for deterring our eagerness to get our hands into the soil. Keep a lookout for these bulbs as you do your Fall shopping!

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

In Sag Harbor, a proposed plan to build a 6800 sq ft home on High Street is denied. After two public hearings it was determined that the "Mc Mansion" style structure would not be appropriate and would break continuity in the surrounding area where the largest house is half the size.

Sagaponack, Poxobogue Golf Course, on 39 acres, has an asking price of $7 million. Southampton Town has already offered $5 million, hoping to buy the property and prevent any development on the prime piece of land. Last fall an application was made to subdivide the parcel and, since that time, the town has been working to find alternatives to such a plan.

On the Market:

Rowdy Hall on Egypt Lane was once the summer residence of Jacqueline Bouvier and is truly a historic East End estate. Built in the 1700s as a village boarding house that was frequented by artists, it later became the birthplace and home of the legendary Jackie. The home has 5 bedrooms, five baths, five fireplaces, library, and artist's studio. Its 3000 sq ft has been completely renovated and overlooks the pond on the green. It is listed with Sotheby's in Amagansett for $5,500,000.

In Sagaponack with views of Poxobogue is a 5.000 so ft 5 bedroom, 4.5 bath French country style home with pond views. It has 2 fireplaces, a pool and a 2 car garage on 1.4 acres. $1,995,000 with Allan M. Schneider Associates, Bridgehampton.

Haddonfield on the Pond is 4500 sq ft traditional shingle style home in the Georgica Pond estate area on 2 acres. 320 ft runs along the pond It has 5 bedrooms and 6.5 baths, a recreational area, heated pool, staff quarters and wine cellar. It is listed with Allan M. Schneider at $5,250,000.

The Hook Pond Estate in East Hampton is a 6,600 sq ft contemporary, designed by Charles Gwathmey on 3.2 acres. It has a heated pool, tennis court and 288 ft of frontage and a dock on Hook Pond. It has 6 bedrooms, 4.5 baths and a double height living area with an ocean view. Sotheby's of East Hampton is one of three brokers that hold the listing at $12,500,000.

Rentals:

winter rentals in Secluded Montauk and Shelter Island include a Shelter Island beach house on three acres of land with waterviews all around and a sandy beach. It has 5 bedrooms and 3 baths. Listed with Allan M Schneider Associates on Shelter Island for $90,000 year round. And in Dering Harbor, there is an 1888 Federal Style with 7 bedrooms and 4.5 baths that include staffs quarters. It is being rented furnished with period furnishings for $85,000 year round and is listed with M.Wein Realty.

And in Montauk, a 10,000 sq ft oceanfront with every amenity and private ocean beach. The estate has a 10-seat movie theatre, bar. library and separate guest cottage. It is listed with Allan M. Schneider Associates, Amagansett office for $88,000 for the winter.

1031 TAX DEFERRED EXCHANGES – A WORD OF CAUTION

Has your business or investment real estate become nprofitable, does it require large or growing main nance expenses, or has it reached the peak of its value making it a lackluster investment)? If so, you would robably like to have a more profitable investment but re concerned about the tax consequences of acquiring ew and different properties Because of internal revenue code 1031, it is possible to elieve yourself of current properties and make new rea state investments without incurring capital gains tax his process is called a "tax deferred exchange." One or This process is called a "tax deferred exchange. more properties can be sold and reinvested in any num ber of other properties, an unlimited number of time without being subject to the normal income tax from a sale as long as they are like-kind exchanges. This exchange can even take place with properties under development, and as much as six months after the sale of your current holdings. In a like-kind exchange no ain or loss is recognized unless unlike property is eceived in the transaction, in which case only a portion of the gain would be taxable and the rest tax deferred. The tax deferred exchange poses myriad benefits, but i can be easy to invalidate a tax-free exchange without a comprehensive understanding of the forms and codes Meeting the requirements of a "trade or business o nvestment" property, filing for a delayed exchange establishing intent, and working with a facilitator who an hold funds during the exchange process are all cru cial and if done incorrectly can cause an exchange to be nvalidated by the IRS. Because of these complexities always consult with an expert.

FRESH FOOD Dear Dan,

My name is Lillian Woudsma and I am responsible for the taste of Sag Harbor which was held on Spetmber 12th. I am responding to an article written by Geraldine Pluenneke on September 10th.

Our Taste of Sag Harbor has nothing to do with local ingredients as Brian halweil thought. We invite restaurants, caterers and other food peoole in from SaHarbor to sell what they make in their establishments. We have a wide variety of different foods being served in Sag Harbor including Thai, French. Italian, Mexiacna Japanese etc, Our aim is to show the diversity of our community. We never ask any food establishment to use local ingredi-

THANKS! Dear Dan,

I have sailed the waters around the North Fork for about fifteen years. Six years ago I sold my boat, and just recently I decided to purchase another sailboat. In the beginning of July I found a boat that I was interested in buying. Ed Viola, a resident of the North Fork and a marine surveyor, conducted the survey on a boat that I was looking at five (5) years ago and I called him to perform the survey on the boat that I was now preparing to buy. I called Mr.

Viola and we agreed on a time and date for the boat to be surveyed. At this time Mr. Viola asked me the particulars of the boat. Upon giving him the information that he requested, i.e. the boats make, year etc., Mr. Viola informed me that he was familiar with the boat and that the boat has water damage in the port and starboard decks. Mr. Viola could have waited until he completed the survey and collected his payment for the survey before sharing this information with me. How refreshing it is to know that there are still honest and trustworthy people around. I think that Mr. Viola should be commended for his honesty. I know that in that future if anyone asked me for a surveyor, Ed Viola will be the man I would recommend.

Although I have thanked Mr. Viola personally, I would like to publicly thank him for his candor.

MEMORY OF A SPECIAL MAN Dear Dan.

Your article about Spalding Gray stimulated me to write this letter. I am a leading periodontist in New York and Spalding was my patient. Before his death was recorded and confirmed on TV and newspapers, after several phone calls from the police department, it was a visit from two police detectives who even requested me to identify his remains at the medical examiners office with his oral x-rays for final identification, the shock of reality set in.

For Spalding and I had numerous conversations about life, his monologues, his profession, yet most of all he related how much he loved and loved being with his family – especially being with them in the comfort zone of his historic home in Sag Harbor.

When I chided him about an ad for Disney World in an advertisement – something against his grain – he concurred but 'his family got time on the house at Disney World so it was OK.'

He was a decent, charitable giving man. However when he sold that historic house his conversations and frustrations changed. Even though monetarily it was successful, we would complain verbally, how much he missed living there. His kids and his wife and he had such great moments of enjoyment and contentment. To me that was a major blow to Spalding. Even though he moved relatively close by and made some money, he always said he would swap at that moment – to get back that wonderful comfort zone of Sag Harbor and his house with his family.

Yes we discussed his accident in Ireland, his operation, his metal plate, etc., how much the plate disturbed him. Yes the accident its sequella triggered reactions but even after that he always related his disruption of losing that Sag Harbor home. This was a private man who always had time to converse about realities of life, always had time to give to charitable affairs, loved living in 'that house' but most of all loved his wife, daughter and two sons and was proud to be a man and say so.

I join all in wishing well, and extending my sympathies to Mrs. Gray and their children.

Police Blotter

Gun Toting Tubby Wobbles Off After Robbery. According to Riverhead Town Police, an unidentified heavy-set man robbed the King Kullen store on Route 58 at gunpoint. He casually entered the grocery and asked for the manager then demanded he be shown the safe. Under duress, the manager obliged, at which point the thief grabbed an undetermined amount of cash and fled the store on foot. Anyone with information is asked to call Crime Stoppers at 1-800-220-TIPS or police at 631-727-4500.

Stranger Than Fiction. Some Things You Just

Can't Make Up. This latest bit of thievery deserves special mention in the crime annals...A middle-aged man set his sights on the Hess Mart near Tanger Outlet Center on Route 58. He pulled into the gas station, walked up to the counter and asked for a pack of cigarettes, which the clerk gave him. It was with his next request "things" got dicey. Claiming this wasn't a joke as he had a gun, he demanded all the bills in the register. Again, the store employee complied and watched (perhaps, aghast) as the bandit made his get-away in a white taxi. Authorities were notified and a description on the incident was broadcast. A little while later a cab matching the description of the get away "mobile" was stopped by police. And inside, they discovered a fake pistol, cash from the alleged robbery and a fellow, who (believe it or not) matched the description of the one who robbed the mini mart.

I Have My Suspicions...And so, it seems, does a resident on Sandpiper Lane in Bridgehampton, who contacted authorities concerning a few missing jewels. According to Southampton Town Police reports, an emerald and diamond ring, a wedding ring, earrings and a man's watch were stolen from the home. The estimated value of the missing jewels totals over $14,000 and the homeowner was able to provide the name of the suspected pilferer.

Champers Charade. Over on Windward Road in Springs a missing house key was key to a robbery. According to the homeowner, five bottles of bubbly and a $1,000 camera disappeared. Unable to name anyone who might be capable of such, the resident did mention that several people knew where she kept the extra key.

Shingles On Us, So Go On And Help Yourself. It seems East End "hospitality" knows no bounds as 25 bundles of cedar shingles was reported missing from a building site on Sayre's Path in Wainscott.

Caught In The Act. A guest at the Ocean Beach Motel in Montauk apparently surprised an uninvited visitor to his room...and we're not talking housekeeping. The fiend was caught with a bottle in one hand and cash in the other, both of which he dropped after being discovered. He then fled the scene. A description was provided to police, who were able to nab the troublemaker. Authorities allege this pesky perp was also responsible for a series of other robberies including hotel room heists at the Royal Atlantic Motel and car burglaries, which may have netted him several credit cards and over $750 in cold hard cash.

Caper Gets Youth Busted Over Beauty Goods. It's been said the cost of beauty is high...and certainly an arrest is quite the price to pay. A young woman was nabbed after being spotted by a Kmart store employee who noticed that she attempted to slip out of the Bridgehampton store without paying for tweezers, earrings, hair products, makeup and pens. Arrested for petit larceny for allegedly stealing $60 worth of goods, the beauty bandit was released later with an appearance ticket.

Ripped To Shreds. A woman returned to her home on Morris Park Lane in East Hampton only to discover a skirt and shirt had been ripped to shreds. According to East Hampton Town Police reports, there was a witness to the carnage and the victim apparently knows the ne'er do well scissor hound.

G.I. Joe Mystery. Or perhaps the assailant is building a mini-moat? It's the only thing I can think of to explain the reported disappearance of four feet of stockade fence from a Pineneck Avenue home in Noyac.

One Can Only Imagine...It's almost touching that in this day and digital age a cell phone can disappear and not be discovered missing until a week later. According to East Hampton Village Police reports, a cellular that was last seen in mid-July was reported AWOL a week later. Soon after a bill arrived with over $800 in long distance charges.

Fall Antiques Show and Sale Saturday Oct. 2 Ladies Auxuliary-Southold Legion Post 803 on the grounds of the Legion Post, Main Road, Southold, Long Island. 9am-4:30pm, rain date October 3rd. More information 734-5143.

STOP FOR TURTLES From late spring through the fall, our indigenous turtles roam their now fragmented environment. As they wander out onto the roadways, they are often struck by speeding and unexpecting motorists. These precious turtles are slow moving and can be easily avoided. When frightened, they withdraw into their shells and resemble an ellipitical stone in the road. Please drive with care and help a turtle cross the road.
